Congress ties bandage over fiscal problems

By CLIFF HAAS
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House and Senate went home for the evening Wednesday after working on separate measures that would temporarily avert a government default and the closing of federal agencies.

Congress thus put off tough budget decisions until after President Reagan returns from the Geneva summit.

Lawmakers were operating under a warning from the White House that the government "would temporarily stop paying its bills" if there is no action by Friday. The administration also said it would prefr to see long-term solutions.

On a 300-121 vote, the House passed and sent to the Senate legislation increasing the government's $1.824 trillion in borrowing authority by $80 billion. This would be enough to keep the government solvent through Dec. 13.

The Senate at first indicated it would not act until today, but then on a voice vote Wednesday night the chamber passed a measure that would give the government renewed borrowing authority only until Dec. 6. That bounced the issue back to the House for further action, which would not come until today.

White House Deputy Press Secretary Edward Djerejian said President Reagan wanted Congress to continue working on the government's budget problems.

"The president accepts the obvious sentiment of both houses of Congress," Djerejian said. "But he will continue to urge Congress to deal with our federal deficit once and for all."

Legislation raising the national debt limit to more than $2 trillion has been stalled by wrangling over rival plans passed by the House and Senate to force a balanced federal budget by the end of the decade. Those budget plans have been attached as amendments to the debt-limit legislation.

Congressional bargainers have begun a second round of talks aimed at breaking the impasse, but they have concluded they would be unable to complete agreement before a Thursday midnight deadline.

Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., the assistant Republican leader in the House, said "it was not only unlikely but probably impossible" that the deadline could be met.

Thus, legislators sought to buy themselves time by passing the interim debt measure.

Earlier, the Senate, by voice vote, temporarily put off a separate pressing problem by giving final congressional approval to a stopgap spending bill that would keep money flowing to most government agencies.

The measure, approved by the House on Tuesday, is needed because only two of the 13 regular spending bills for fiscal 1986, which began Oct. 1, have been approved by Congress. Without that authority, government offices would have been forced to begin closing at midnight Thursday.

Reagan is expected to sign that bill, which extends through Dec. 12.

However, administration officials have publicly sidestepped questions about what

Break follows storm

Snowfall matches November figures

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Schools in three communities closed Wednesday and highways remained slick in many areas but a calm behind Magic Valley's first major winter storm gave highway crews and officers a brief break.

William Galkin of the National Weather Service in Kimberly said the storm this week dropped 7 inches of snow in several areas, which is at least equal to the average snowfall for the entire month. Normally, he said, November's total snowfall ranges from 4 to 7 inches. This week's storm also reached close to the record amount of snow on the ground at one time in the month of November.

However in one 24-hour period on Nov. 22, 1977, a total of 12.1 inches of snow fell at the Kimberly weather station and in 1979, November storms left a 9-inch snow cover on the ground.

"Usually we have fairly warm weather in November and the snow that falls melts. In the 1977 storm, the snow contained .95 of an inch of moisture," Galkin said.

Snow that covered the area with 4 to 7 inches in Magic Valley communities on Wednesday contained a high degree of moisture, Galkin said. Rupert reported 4 to 5 inches as did Jerome. Burley had 7 inches, Buhl 6 inches, Hagerman 3 inches, and Fairfield a trace. Water content was measured at .35 inch in Kimberly, .61 inch in Jerome, and .42 inch in Twin Falls. Buhl had .56 inch of moisture.

Galkin added that temperatures have ranged below normal to date in November. The normal daytime temperature for November is 51.27 degrees and on Wednesday the high was 29 degrees and on Tuesday 22 degrees.

Record low for the month was on Nov. 13, 1916, when minus 4 degrees was recorded and the warmest

House passes $20 billion bill for dams

By DAVE GOELLER
The Associated Press

Idaho projects — A5

WASHINGTON — The House gave overwhelming approval Wednesday to a massive public works bill authorizing $20 billion for dams, harbors and a myriad of other Army Corps of Engineers projects over the next decade.

The measure, about twice the scope of one pending in the Senate, is part of Congress' latest attempt to authorize the first new Corps work in nine years and enact its first omnibus water projects bill since 1970.

The House bill would authorize some 230 new flood-control dams, harbors, inland waterways, hydroelectric facilities and erosion control projects and provide loans to municipalities for drinking water systems.

The legislation, passed on a 358-60 roll call, also would authorize improvements to or expansion of about 150 existing Corps of Engineers projects around the country.

At the same time, the bill would deauthorize more than 200 musty projects, one of them dating back to 1827, that have either never been built or never completed.

The bill's floor manager, Rep. Robert Roe, D-N.J., estimated that it would cost $11 billion to construct the projects proposed for the scrap heap.

The legislation has something for almost everyone. It even names a dam and visitor center in Alabama after Rep. Tom Bevill, D-Ala., the chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee that will have a big say in which projects get funded.

The only states without projects are Utah, which traditionally gets little Corps work, and South Dakota and Vermont.

Roe, whose own state is in line for $1.3 billion worth of work, said that Vermont and South Dakota were deliberately left out to give him bargaining leverage with the chief Senate negotiators, Republicans Robert Stafford of Vermont and James Abdnor of South Dakota.

The bill does not provide money for any of the new projects. Under the budget system, funding for projects must be approved by Congress in separate appropriations legislation. The fiscal 1986 Corps appropriations bill already signed into law contains no money for new projects.

No new projects have been authorized by Congress since 1976, largely because the House until this year has been unwilling to go along with demands by the Senate and the Ford, Carter and Reagan administrations to force local beneficiaries to start paying a greater share of the costs.

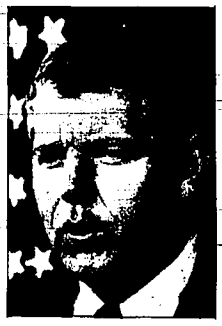
School vouchers for poor proposed

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
The Associated Press



WILLIAM J. BENNETT
A ticket to better education

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Education William J. Bennett proposed on Wednesday to give poor parents vouchers worth an average of $600 as a ticket "to find the best possible schools and opportunities" for their children.

These parents would be able to spend the tax-free voucher to enroll their children in private schools, or in a public school outside their home district, or they could keep the child in the same school.

"The idea of choice is an idea whose time has come," Bennett told a news conference. He said the use of vouchers in the existing $3.7 billion Chapter 1 remedial education program would help some poor youngsters from inner-cities attend schools in affluent suburbs.

Private and parochial school leaders hailed the plan called TEACH — taking its name from first letters of the first three words and the first and second letters of the fourth word of The Equity And Choice Act — as a boon for the disadvantaged.

"The poor deserve the right to choose the type of school that best serves their needs," said the Rev. Jack Meyers, president of the National Catholic Educational Association.

But the voucher plan — a rewrite of a proposal the Reagan administration first advanced in 1983 with no success — was attacked by the presidents of both major teachers' unions.

Mary Hatwood Futrell of the National Education Association, called it a sham that would hurt public schools while making only a small dent on the tuition at most private schools.

Albert Shanker of the American Federation of Teachers, who has said students should have more choice over what public school they attend, said the voucher plan would "cannibalize . . . a program with a proven track record."

Michael D. Casserly, a lobbyist for the Council of Great City Schools, called it "an all-out assault on inner-city public school systems. Rather than calling this thing 'TEACH,' they ought to call it 'DOPE' for 'destruction of public education.'"

Storm spreads snow from Rockies onto Plains

By ROGER PETTERSON
The Associated Press

A major storm that stranded scores of hunters and hikers with up to 5 feet of snow in the mountains of the West triggered an avalanche Wednesday in Utah that buried two skiers, and threw snow onto the Plains.

Travelers were warned of slick roads from California to Nebraska, while violent thunderstorms struck in Kansas and Oklahoma.

Thick snow and ice had downed power lines serving thousands of customers in Utah, and behind the storm cold air drove temperatures down in Arizona and usually balmy Southern California.

"It's been quite a storm," said National Weather Service meteorologist William Alder in Salt Lake City. Up to 29 inches fell at some Utah ski resorts. "Since May, we've had just big storms, not small ones."

"As fast as the storm developed and as much snow as it dropped, I've never seen anything happen that fast here," said Pat Carlin, superintendent of elementary schools in Kingman, Ariz., where schools were closed Tuesday.

The avalanche near Sunset Peak in Big Cottonwood Canyon buried two cross-country skiers under snow for 20 minutes before they were rescued and airlifted to hospitals, where both were listed in critical condition, authorities said.

In Broken Arrow, Okla., a thunderstorm piled golf-ball-sized hail 4 to 6 inches deep on city streets and ripped the roof off three junior high school classrooms an hour after students had been dismissed for the day. Five people were treated for minor injuries from flying glass and debris, police said.

Four people were killed Wednesday when a single-engine plane crashed in a field during a severe thunderstorm in southeast Kansas.

"There is a good possibility that it was weather related," said Jim Grayson of the Kan-

Gorbachev prepared for productive summit

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Wednesday he was ready for serious and productive work at his meeting with President Reagan next week, and promised he would not go to the negotiating table with empty hands, Tass reported.

Gorbachev, meeting at the Kremlin with a group of Nobel Peace Prize winners, vigorously attacked Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative. He vowed to find "an effective answer" if the United States develops and deploys what he called space strike weapons, the government news agency said.

But Gorbachev gave no hint of any new Soviet proposals on arms control or other issues that he might take to the summit Tuesday and Wednesday in Geneva, Switzerland, the first between U.S. and Soviet leaders since 1979.

Mutual threats from space-based weapons would increase tension between Soviets and Americans "to a point unprecedented even by today's standards" and make relations "even more difficult to control," Tass quoted Gorbachev as saying.

Reagan says the goal of the research program, commonly known as Star Wars, is to create a space-based defense against nuclear missiles. He says the new weapons, if successfully tested, would gradually make missiles obsolete.

Gorbachev maintains the space system would be offensive in nature. And Tass quoted him as saying Wednesday:

"The proposals echoed past Soviet suggestions, which the United States has rejected as impractical or unverifiable.

the president will do with a short-term increase in the debt limit.

"The president does not want a short-term extension," White House spokesman Larry Speakes repeated Wednesday. "The president wants a full debt ceiling bill with Gramm-Rudman attached to it."

"Gramm-Rudman" is the political nickname attached to the Senate-passed version of the balanced-budget plan which was originally co-authored by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and Warren Rudman, R-N.H.

The pressure of having to act on the debt-limit legislation has been used to force action on the budget plan, but even Gramm and Rudman acknowledged Wednesday that it was probably better to have the short-term debt limit increase instead of sending the president to the summit while the government was in turmoil.

"We believe that we can't have a cloud of fiscal collapse hanging over the president's head as he goes to Geneva," Gramm said.

After the summit, Gramm said, "We hope at that point we can get the president to focus on this single issue."

Fuse blows, plant shuts down

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — A blown fuse caused the Washington Public Power Supply System's No. 2 nuclear generating plant to automatically shut down on Wednesday, officials reported.

The reactor, which had been operating continuously for 100 days as of Tuesday night, suffered the blown fuse in the feedwater control system which supplies cooling water to the reactor, according to WPPSS spokesman John Britton. That led to a false instrument reading, causing an unusually high water level in the reactor and the automatic shutdown.

The reactor, which has been operating at 72 percent of full power for several months due to a damaged recirculating pump, will not be restarted until early next week, Britton said.

Craig assails borrowing plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fallback borrowing plan is "just one more stall," to keep Congress from tackling the issue of a balanced budget, says Rep. Larry Craig.

The House and Senate on Wednesday approved a one-month extension in the government's borrowing authority. It will allow the government to keep operating despite a deadlock tied to budget-balancing legislation.

"This bill adds another $1,600 in debt for every American family of four, aggravates our budget problems and gives Congress another month to avoid making any choices on the deficit," said Craig, in a news release.

"This represents the opening of a new path of least resistance, which Congress will follow as surely as water runs down a gutter," he said.

Cigarette tax extension passes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House and Senate on Wednesday each approved extending the 16-cent-a-pack federal tax on cigarettes through mid-December.

The measure, which replaces another temporary extension that is due to expire on Thursday, was approved by the House and sent to the Senate by voice vote with little debate.

However, the Senate, also acting on a voice vote, approved a different version of the measure as part of legislation temporarily increasing the government authority to borrow money to pay its bills. The two versions of the cigarette tax bill now must be worked out.

Nielsen's condition unchanged

TWIN FALLS — Craig Neilsen, 44, of Twin Falls, president of Cactus Pete's Inc., and several other business operations, remained unchanged Wednesday night in the University of Utah Medical Center in Salt Lake City, where he is being treated for a fractured neck.

A nurse in the cerebral vascular unit of the hospital, where he has been since Monday, said although Neilsen has been listed as serious but stable for the past two days, and his condition has not worsened, she considers him to be in critical condition.

Neilsen was injured Sunday night when his car collided with another vehicle on icy Highway 93, about five miles north of Jackpot.

Collision injures youth, 8

TWIN FALLS — An 8-year-old Twin Falls boy was in fair condition Wednesday night after suffering injuries in an early morning traffic accident.

Ralph Hopkins was a passenger in a car driven by his mother, Maria Hopkins, 28, of Twin Falls.

Twin Falls police reported Mrs. Hopkins was eastbound on Second Avenue East at 8:15 a.m. and failed to yield at a stop sign. Her car collided with a vehicle driven by Charles Mattice, 58, of Twin Falls, who was traveling south on Elm Street.

The Hopkins car was struck in the right side where the child was seated. He suffered glass cuts of the face and head and had to be extricated from the vehicle. Mrs. Hopkins and another passenger, Steve Hopkins, 11, were treated for minor injuries and released.

sas Highway Patrol.

Patches of snow and ice greased highways from Wyoming to northern Arizona and from California to Nebraska, but few serious accidents were reported.

Since Friday, a series of storms had been blamed for at least 25 deaths from the Pacific Northwest into the upper Mississippi Valley.

The storm that had clogged the Sierra Nevada range with up to 5 feet of snow weakened Wednesday in the central Rockies but spread its snow into Wyoming and Nebraska, the National Weather Service said.

Up to 10 inches of snow fell overnight at Lander, Wyo., giving the city an accumulation of 16 inches, with 5 inches at Kimball, Neb., and an additional 4 to 8 inches was expected in the mountains of Colorado.

Steady snow fell in Colorado's mountains but Denver only got a dusting.

Ice brought by freezing drizzle during the night broke power lines from Cheyenne, Wyo., to Sidney, Neb. Don Brunner, general manager of the Rural Electric Co. in Pine Bluffs, Wyo., said about 2,000 of his customers were without power for 6 to 8 hours during the night.

Utah Power & Light Co. crews restored electricity Wednesday to 1½ square miles of the Cottonwood section of Salt Lake County where nearly a foot of wet, heavy snow downed lines, said dispatcher Jerry Thomas. Several thousand other customers lost electricity Tuesday when snow-weighted branches broke powerlines and cars slid into utility poles, he said.

In Washington state, where up to 500 elk hunters had been stranded by around 4 feet of snow in the Cascades and two hunters died, 100 hunters still in the mountains were contacted and told rescuers they wanted to stay for more hunting, authorities said.

One of those who took advantage of a helicopter ride out was Al Hilbert of Seattle. "I was doing fine in a big motor home that slept six with plenty of heat, a three-week supply of food and six quarts of scotch, but I got to wondering how I would ever get this motor home down and what good I was doing here," he said.

In northern California's mountain counties, where the snow followed weeks of unseasonably warm weather, deputies and ski patrols had rescued scores of people from the Sierra Nevada, and in El Dorado County sheriff's Sgt. Steve Ayers estimated that 85 to 90 people had been rescued in his county alone, including nine campers rescued by helicopter Wednesday.

But Placer County authorities said two more campers were being sought. Two hunters and two hikers missing in the Sierra foothills in northwestern Nevada also were found safe.

In southern California, four missing hikers were found Wednesday in San Jacinto State Park 100 miles east of Los Angeles, the Riverside County Sheriff's Department said, but a fifth was still missing.

In central Arizona, the Coconino County Sheriff's Office searched for three campers who might have been stranded northeast of Payson. The three had not been heard from since they left for a camping trip Sunday, said Lt. Jack Judd.

Cold air covered southern California, with a low of just 38 at coastal Santa Barbara and 42 in Los Angeles, and the reading at Lancaster in the Mojave Desert, near Edwards Air Force Base, fell to 27. Ely, Nev., had a record low Wednesday of 7 degrees below zero, and in Arizona, the Grand Canyon lodge had a low of 2 below zero, with a chilly 36 in some suburbs of the desert winter mecca of Phoenix.

In Orange County, Calif., about 320 low-risk inmates housed in tents to relieve jail overcrowding shivered through two nights of temperatures in the 40s. Sheriff Brad Gates said heaters ordered last summer had not yet arrived.

But the snow set off a frenzy in ski shops.

"It's been just crazy — really, really busy," ski shop manager Kevin Hill said Tuesday in Corona del Mar. "People have been flocking in. . . . People were hanging from the rafters."

Since Friday, authorities have blamed the weather for nine deaths in Wisconsin, five deaths in California, four in Kansas, two each in Iowa and Washington state, and one each in South Dakota, Colorado, and Montana.

But the House this year included cost-sharing language that, for example, would require local interests to shoulder 25 percent of the price of a flood-control dam.

The House formula, however, falls short of the Senate bill's language, which is in line with the Reagan administration proposal. The Office of Management and Budget has criticized the House package both on this ground and the number of projects it contains.

Roe said in an interview that he was ready to move toward the Senate's cost-sharing proposal once the Senate passes a bill and conferees meet to resolve differences between the two bills.

Critics, including the Environmental Policy Institute, have called the huge House bill pork-barrel legislation, but no representative attacked the overall package during floor debate.

Roe said it was "total nonsense" to use this description, which Webster's International Dictionary defines as "government money spent for political patronage, as for local improvements to please the voters in a district."

"Every project has been reviewed and analyzed," Roe said. "We've had intensive hearings for almost three years. It's a very strong environmental bill."

reading was 76 degrees on Nov. 9, 1958.

A warming trend and a break between storms is expected to continue until the weekend. Galkin said a storm in the Gulf of Alaska is expected to move to the west coast of British Columbia and then be carried by a southwesterly flow aloft into southern Idaho, bringing rain or snow by Saturday and cold temperatures again on Monday.

Most Magic Valley school officials said the lack of strong wind kept rural bus routes open and schools could continue as normal on Wednesday. However, Bliss announced plans to close Tuesday night and Buhl and Castleford schools did not open Wednesday morning because of icy roads and drifts. All were expecting to be open today.

State police reported Wednesday that some minor accidents and slide-offs continued, but in much smaller numbers than on Tuesday. As of late Wednesday officers could not even report the total number of accidents. Accident reports were piling up waiting time for officers to get off the highways long enough to bring in the information.

State, city and county officers said fortunately there were no extremely serious accidents although several motorists and passengers were taken to hospitals Tuesday night with injuries.

The center initially pays for the flight to Twin Falls. But the refugees must repay the airline ticket cost after they arrive and find jobs, said the Refugee Center's director, Shari Toolson.

Lucas sues over title use

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Film producer George Lucas has filed a federal suit charging that use of the term "Star Wars" to describe the Reagan administration's Strategic Defense Initiative constitutes trademark infringement.

The producer asked a federal district court in Washington to issue a temporary restraining order barring the Coalition for the Strategic Defense Initiative from further use of "Star Wars" in a 30-second TV commercial now being broadcast in support of the administration's controversial plan for a space-based anti-ballistic-missile defense system.

The coalition includes 137 groups supporting the defense proposal, the best known of which is the Washington-based High Frontier.

Without citing a specific dollar figure, the Lucas suit also claims damages and asks the court to order the coalition to cover the cost of filing the suit.

Untested in AIDS patients as yet

Drug called 'promising' against AIDS

BOSTON (AP) — An experimental medicine that appears to dissolve the AIDS virus without harming the human body is a "promising new candidate" in the war against the lethal disease, researchers report.

The researchers caution, however, that their results are very preliminary, and the drug has not been tested in AIDS patients. But if it works, the medicine will represent an entirely new approach to fighting germs.

The drug is called AL 721. It disrupts the outer coat, or envelope, of the AIDS virus so it cannot invade healthy cells. In the test tube, the medicine was able to protect vulnerable white blood cells from infection by the virus.

AL 721 removes cholesterol from the virus' envelope, changing its structure. Without an intact envelope, the virus is powerless.

One of the researchers, Dr. Fulton Crews of the University of Florida, said experts have long known that solvents can kill viruses. But until now, no one has considered assaulting them inside the human body by drawing out the cholesterol that is part of their outer membranes.

"Cholesterol makes membranes rigid and hard," Crews said. "So when you pull the cholesterol out, the membrane does, in essence, melt."

However, the drug does not have a disruptive effect on the cholesterol contained in normal human cells, and researchers believe that the drug's apparent safety could be a major advantage.

"This compound is very non-toxic," said Dr. Prem Sarin of the National Cancer Institute. "It doesn't do anything to normal cells at the concentration we used."

Several other experimental AIDS medicines work by attacking reverse transcriptase, an enzyme the virus uses to take command of infected cells. However, many of these drugs also have damaging side effects that could limit their long-term use.

The new medicine's lack of apparent side effects "makes AL 721 a promising new candidate for clinical investigation in the treatment of AIDS and AIDS-related complex, but it should be emphasized that results so far are preliminary and that much more work will be required to determine the clinical usefulness of this agent," the researchers wrote in a letter in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

AL 721 was developed at Weizmann Institute of Science in Rehovot, Israel. It is being tested in the United States by researchers at Praxis Pharmaceuticals, Inc., of Beverly Hills, Calif.

The AIDS virus attacks crucial disease-fighting white blood cells known as T-4 helper cells. The cells are subverted into becoming virus factories, and they are killed in the process. Without these cells, victims fall prey to otherwise harmless germs that produce overwhelming infections.

Sarin said experts won't know if the drug will work as well as they hope until testing begins on AIDS victims.

2nd launch of MX reported successful

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — An MX missile with four dummy warheads successfully flew 4,800 miles Wednesday to Kwajalein Atoll in the Pacific after its second silo test-launch, the Air Force announced.

The launch at 8:03 a.m. MST marked the midpoint in 20 test launches for the MX, which eventually will carry 10 independently targetable warheads.

The missile, which has been dubbed the "Peacekeeper" by President Reagan, was launched from a modified Minuteman silo.

Panel approves radioactive waste bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation giving most states another seven years to build regional disposal facilities for low-level radioactive wastes was approved Wednesday by a third congressional committee.

On a 15-1 vote with only Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., dissenting, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee approved a bill continuing until 1993 the availability of the three currently operating disposal sites, in South Carolina, Washington state and Nevada.

The legislation, already approved in slightly different versions by two House committees, is aimed at averting a potential disposal crisis in January when the three states could begin denying other regions the use of the current facilities.

A fourth congressional panel, the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, is scheduled to begin drafting its own version of low-level waste legislation next week.

The bill approved Wednesday retains the same 1993 deadline as the House measures for opening up to as many as a dozen new regional low-level waste disposal facilities across the nation.

But it gives far more power than either of the House versions to the governors of South Carolina, Washington and Nevada to cut off access to their facilities as early as 1988 if the other states fail to meet a series of interim deadlines for getting their own dumps in operation.

Under both House versions, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission is given "emergency authority" to require continued access to the three current dumps when the non-sited states fail to meet the interim deadlines if a cutoff would pose a health or safety threat.

However, the Senate panel's version, rather than put that authority in the hands of the NRC, would give it to the governors of South Carolina, Washington and Nevada.

The Senate committee's measure, crafted largely by Chairman James McClure, R-Idaho, and Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., also tightens the interim deadlines.

Both House versions required the non-sited states forming multistate regional compacts for sharing a dump to decide by Jan. 1, 1988, only which among them will be the "host" state for the dump.

The Senate panel's version requires not only that the host state be chosen but also that the specific site for the facility be picked by that deadline.

Brandt calls for ban on space weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former West German Chancellor Willy Brandt called Wednesday for agreements in principle at the U.S.-Soviet summit meeting to ban space weapons and to freeze offensive nuclear arsenals.

Brandt, who promoted East-West reconciliation while in office, said "the world needs a second wave of detente and cooperation." At next week's meeting in Geneva, he said, President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev should break the stalemate in arms control negotiations "with the kind of response the world expects of them."

Brandt said the leaders should authorize their negotiators to work out a treaty cutting nuclear weapons in half and to revive talks to ban all nuclear weapons tests.

In an apparent jab at Reagan's quest for an anti-missile shield, Brandt called on the two sides to "give up the arms race in presumably defensive weapons."

Even a 50 percent reduction in offensive missiles, bombers and submarines may not be deep enough to lower the risks of nuclear war if the United States and the Soviet Union "get involved in what is called strategic defense," he said.

The former chancellor spoke at a ceremony at which he received the sixth annual $30,000 Albert Einstein International Peace Prize. Named for the German-born physicist and pacifist, the award is presented by a private foundation that seeks to promote peacekeeping activities around the world.

Brandt announced in his speech that nearly 90 Nobel Prize winners were polled by the Albert Einstein Peace Prize Foundation and only three felt that a nuclear war was not possible in the near future.

"Of all the others," Brandt said, "most believed a nuclear war could occur within five years."

And yet, he said, "there still is hope . . . Any agreement which both sides can support would be better than continued confrontation."

Both Reagan and Gorbachev have proposed reductions of roughly 50 percent in U.S. and Soviet nuclear might. But the details of their plans are so far apart most U.S. officials and private analysts have minimal expectations for the summit.

Additionally, pre-summit negotiations on a resumption of commercial air travel between the two countries and other lesser issues have bogged down.

April 30 deadline set for Dalkon filing

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal judge has set an April 30 deadline for women who may have suffered injury from the Dalkon Shield birth control device to request damages from the maker.

U.S. District Judge Robert R. Merhige said at a hearing Tuesday that claimants need only send a post card or letter to the Bankruptcy Court in Richmond to be considered for damages payments.

Under the accord reached with the Richmond-based A.H. Robins Co. and attorneys for some of the women with claims pending against the firm, Robins will place a notice in newspapers and magazines publicizing the deadline.

Thousands of women have sued Robins, claiming the device, taken off the market in 1974, caused sterility or other problems.

Robins filed for protection from the claimants and other creditors under Chapter 11 of federal bankruptcy statutes on Aug. 21.

We should say 'yes' to area development

In Twin Falls this fall, objections to a proposed expansion of Independent Meat Co. forced the company to move the location from an agricultural zone to one for industrial usage.

Then, the company had to make design changes in the plan, pulling it back from the Rock Creek Canyon rim.

In Jerome County, developers of a proposed dairy processing plant have met strenuous resident opposition. So have developers of a proposed regional juvenile dentention center. This week,, they decided to look at other sites after some 200 potential neighbors objected in a petition.

We are not in a position to judge the merits of either the specific proposals, or the objections to them.

But we think some thought and attention ought to be given to the fact that, in all three cases, the local economy would have benefited through additional employment opportunities.

At a time when many people in the valley are hurting economically, we think that's something to be considered.

No one is in favor of roughshod businesses or pollution.

But there must be a balance between a community saying it doesn't want growth because it "spoils" what is already there, and saying it welcomes expansion and new ventures for the opportunities they offer.

It is an old axiom that businesses do not pay taxes; people do.

The level of funding in our schools is becoming critically low.

How, we would ask the opponents of all of these proposals, should we meet those needs if we say "no" to every project? Think about it.

Across the decades, Kennedy calls us

Twenty-five impossible years ago, I played hooky one cold November day to crowd with 100,000 other people into Atheneum Square in Hartford, Conn., and cheer a young man who would be president.

He stood with all his joy of life under the marble portico of the Hartford Times building to say, "I ask your help tomorrow in a race between the comfortable and the concerned, between those who are satisfied and those who want to move ahead."

Kathleen Palm

I was only 13 years old and growing up in an affluent white suburb, but in spite of that, or perhaps because of it, what he said was thrilling. Like millions in my generation, I caught fire.

The next day, Nov. 8, 1960, John Fitzgerald Kennedy was elected president of the United States.

The prince of Camelot, we know now, was not all we thought. Fiscal conservative, cold warrior par excellence, playgirls' playmate and progenitor of our Vietnam nightmare. We children didn't know about such things. All we cared about was President Kennedy's charm, his intelligence, his generous goodness and, above all, his youth.

"Ask what you can do," he said, and we asked. "The torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans," he said, and we thought, "He means us."

So, our love of country kindled, we went to Africa and Latin America with the Peace Corps and to the slums of Chicago and the hollows of Appalachia with VISTA and yes, to Vietnam, because our country asked us to.

In our own hometowns, we found ghettos into which we ventured to organize and tutor. In Mississippi we registered new voters whose hopes had been all but crushed.

Shaking off childhoods spent in the long hibernation of the Eisenhower years, we learned for the first time that many of Earth's people were hungry, poor, disenfranchised and suffering. It was Kennedy who taught us.

JOHN FITZGERALD KENNEDY
Too soon to write off the 60s

Now, children no longer, we children of the '60s realize with a start we are as old today as Kennedy was when he was elected. Through many of us seeps regret at having failed to keep our promise. Defensively, we mock our quiescent idealism.

Sixties-bashing is in. Political etiquette now demands that we agree the long-ago Kennedy decade was nothing but turbulent, violent and permissive.

Government, we have convinced ourselves, isn't a freedom train to justice after all, but a necessary evil useful only for salving the status quo.

Why so much mean-spirited revisionism? Perhaps because we do not wish to admit how far we are from what, in 1960, we thought we would become.

Perhaps we cannot bear to face our failures. Kennedy's example lifted many Americans out of the darkness — hungry ones, black ones, poor ones, young and old ones — but 25 years later, we are letting them slip back into the shadows.

All, however, is not lost. "My telephone rang and would not stop; it was President Kennedy calling me up," Bob Dylan sang once upon a time. All these years later, Kennedy's call still compels us, even if we are made to feel foolish if we admit it.

As we start to assume leadership roles, we bring at least some of the old idealism to our tasks. We are increasingly joined by youngsters fascinated by those days they have only read about.

I think, for example, of a young doctor I know who plans to devote himself to research on the effects of Agent Orange. He was 12 when Woodstock happened.

Such signs should not be ignored, nor such energy wasted. We can renew our idealism if we encourage one another. We can ask of our leaders that they cultivate what is best and most generous in us.

We can remind ourselves that not so long ago, changing the world seemed not so daunting a challenge.

It's too soon to write the '60s off, and far too soon to say we have forsaken the dream prompted by a young man who was elected president on a bright November day 25 years ago.

We have strayed from the dream, but we can revive it if we relight the torch we accepted back then. Perhaps, in doing so, we will pass it to others who have not yet found words to ask what they can do, nor any hero to demand such effort from them.

Kathleen Palm's article first appeared in The Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

This is an open letter to the woman who was shopping at King's at in the Lynwood on Sat., Nov. 9, around 2:30 p.m.

Lady, you had better get down on both knees and thank God for your daughter's safety!

Three of us mothers were at the check-out stand when we noticed a little blonde girl, about three, crying and wandering in and out of the isles. I went over and asked her where her mommy was, but she just cried and held her arms up to me. I picked up your daughter and walked up and down each isle, to no avail.

Finally, another blonde girl about nine or 10 came up and poked the little girl in the ribs, but said nothing. I asked the older girl if the child was with her and she said yes, but they had gone to the basement.

All I have to say to you, lady, is you're very lucky I was the one that picked your daughter up and not some kidnapper or child molester. Next time, you may not be so lucky.

Maybe you could tell me how you'd feel to someday go to the refrigerator and see your daughter's picture on a milk carton.

Valley needs promotion

There is a noticeable blank when tourism is pushed by me in regard to Hagerman Valley.

Somehow Hartgen (editor) has taken the view that if I write something in regard to Hagerman Valley (over 20 miles long) that I'm only grinding my own axe. There's been a dearth of information about our valley that's been noticeable to me.

How do we sell the public (tourism) if Hartgen (editor) takes it on himself to either give you a title, or in my case, take it away. He says that he only gives the title of the person who's writing in if that person or the message is important.

When I attend monthly meetings of the Idaho Travel Committee, I attend as a representative of the Chamber of Commerce from Hagerman Valley, representing the county of Gooding. (I happen to be the only one left of those who attended the first local I.T.C. meeting.) A also represent Buhl to a great extent.

Although Twin Falls seems to have done fairly well with tourism this past summer, Hagerman and the valley were hurt. (We now have only one restaurant in Hagerman city.)

If I see an article in the paper (this time by Swen) and I want to support that position, wouldn't the fact that I represent the Chamber (albeit free with lots of donated time) mean a little more than just my name and town?

How many others does Hartgen manipulate? Either putting titles on or leaving them off? It's tough to get a message across in a one newspaper town.

Porter left wrong impression

The press, through Sylvia Porter's widely syndicated column of Nov. 2, not only created false impressions concerning the credibility of the legitimate profession of financial planning but may have turned untold millions away from planning for their family's financial welfare.

Hundreds of thousands of families in America have realized the extensive benefits of total financial planning while an equal number are looking to financial planning to achieve the potential and direction to realize their financial, educational, retirement and other goals.

It is not enough to state that her article is false and misleading but it should also be made clear to your readers that it is supported by innuendo and not facts.

For example, in her column Ms. Porter identifies three instances of fraud with respect to financial planners. In each item, the fraud was in the investment product and not in the financial plan. Apparently the so-called financial planner was the sponsor — promoter of the investment product and not a legitimate financial planner.

Second, her statement that "financial planners are not required to meet industry-wide licensing standards" is false unless she does not consider the licensing requirements of the Securities and Exchange Commission and numerous state agencies, including the State of Idaho, as industry-wide.

Third, although today anyone may call themselves a financial planner, in the interest of comforting and educating her readers, Ms. Porter should have identified the fact that financial planning standards do exist and are conferred through the professional designation, Certified Financial Planner, which, through ever increasing public acceptance, has become the recognized symbol of professionalism and excellence in financial planning.

Granted, many Magic Valley readers may not be familiar with the title, Certified Financial Planner, since of the 10,000 CFP's in the country, many of whom are CPA's and attorneys, there are only six in Idaho and one in Twin Falls.

With respect to professional standards, the International Board of Standards and Practices for CFP's ensures that CFP's practice in accordance with recognized standards of conduct and that they perform their work efficiently, ethically, and in the best interest of their clients.

Adherence to the IBCFP Code of Ethics is mandatory for all CFP's and its provisions strictly enforced. Although space constraints preclude specifics, the Code of Ethics addresses the areas of integrity, objectivity, competence, fairness, confidentiality and professionalism.

Yes, there are qualified, competent, responsible and ethical financial planners. Just thought Ms. Porter and The Times-News would like to know.

Letters/ Math teachers' salaries bring pro-con debate

Education quality decline is falling on deaf ears

Recently, several comments have been made about the archaic pay conditions for math instructors in Idaho's public schools. I would like to make a few observations concerning my own experiences in this field.

About two years ago, I decided to resume my education. Due to a combination of my experience working with youth and my liking and aptitude for the sciences, I was urged by an education counselor to take up the field of science education, especially since there was a projected shortage of instructors in that field.

Since I have such a rapport with youth, I readily began an education in that area. However, I soon encountered an attitude by the general public that changed my mind.

There was an awareness on the part of high-level education officials that people just couldn't stay in education and be expected to pay for their own education on the low entry-level wages being offered.

However, the general public attitude, and that of school board members did not necessarily reflect this.

Time and again, I heard comments from people concerning teachers' pay. No matter how minimal teachers' pay was, they shouldn't be paid that much. Why not? "They just shouldn't!", people would shout.

If a person were to go to school to get an education in any field except education, the more money they got upon graduation, the better, unless they chose to go into education.

People are willing to pay large sums for a doctor, an electrician, or a plumber, but for some reason, people in education just don't deserve to be paid for it.

School boards, though sometimes seemingly sympathetic to the plight of low pay for school personnel, usually fund other areas first. Then, when questioned about pay raises say, "So sorry. We don't have any money left."

The same people who are willing to buy hundred-dollar toys, designer clothes, and trips to Disneyland, don't place any importance on other things for their children such as their future.

The business men controlled Legislature feels that nothing involving the public good is worth while, so higher education goes just as lacking.

Your articles on the declining quality of education are informing and to the point, but I'm afraid they are falling on deaf ears.

Reform education system through more competition

Re: T.N. editorial 'Math teachers need more money'

To: citizenry

Position: opposed

Credentials: Former math teacher, school board, father of six.

Introduction: Were I still teaching, I would be knocking down well in excess of $20/teaching hour right here in the Magic Valley. So would many of my friends who have also "retired," none because of low salaries. More money will only make the problem worse in the long term — a nice Band Aid.

Problem 1: The entire system may have served well for many years, but so did trains before Amtrak. It is rapidly becoming hopelessly outmoded. It is a dinosaur.

Recommendation: Revamp the system according to the lessons taught by America's best run corporations in their search for excellence. Such a system would include a competitive mix of: home schools, free schools, traditional schools, private and parochial schools. All would be run with a combination of public and private money, all in competition with one another.

Problem 2: Accountability and protectionism: Teachers will often say there is no way to measure what good teaching or administration is. Bull.

Recommendation: The answer is simple; changed student performance over time. The old fashioned test measured against a voluntary set of state or local standards. Increasingly corporations are competitively hired to run social services, free to choose their own employees.

Jails and treatment plants are but two examples of buck stopping, accountability-oriented administrations; where better and cheaper somehow go together.

Problem 3: Parental impotence.

Recommendation: It is your God-given mandate to educate your children. You have foolishly allowed the state to take that responsibility from you, being duped into believing that you have no ability, skill or knowledge. Too bad.

By being free to send your children to the school of your choice, as you are free to eat in the restaurant of your choice, and being free to demand accountability, as you would from that restaurant, you would find the cost of the service would plummet and the quality would skyrocket.

So many are satisfied with the "hamburger" now dished out. That is understandable, having never tasted choice steak. That does not, however, change the fact that quality "educational" steak exists or that its dollar cost is less.

Problem 4: Fear to risk: will any of the above happen? Probably not. At least until the system becomes so abysmal and so expensive that the rest of the world has long passed us by as it has in so many areas which are government subsidized and protected and/or unionized to death.

Conclusion: Without risk of failure, you automatically lose, never having lived. If you risk, you may lose in the short run, but it's the only chance you have to win. Is there really a choice?

Congress considers 3 Idaho water projects

The Associated Press

Flood damage prevention work on the Little Wood River in the Gooding-Shoshone area is among three Army Corps of Engineers water projects and studies for Idaho under consideration in Congress.

The House on Wednesday passed its version of the omnibus water projects authorization bill. The Senate version is still being worked on by the Finance Committee.

The dollar amount following each project or study is the estimated cost of completion.

• Bonneville Dam Navigation Lock, shared with Oregon and Washington, navigation, $191 million, in both Senate and House versions.

• Little Wood River, vicinity of Gooding and Shoshone, flood damage prevention, $3.8 million, in both Senate and House versions.

• Lower Snake River Fish and Wildlife Compensation Plan Modifications, shared with Washington, fish and wildlife mitigation, cost not available, House only.

Authorization was withdrawn from several other Idaho projects were withdrawn from authorization in the legislation approved Tuesday. Following are the name of the project, the type and the year or years that it was authorized by Congress. Work is either incomplete or has never begun on any of them, according to the House Public Works and Transportation Committee.

• Mud Lake Area, flood control, 1950.

• South Fork, Clearwater River, flood control, 1950.

• Teton River, flood control, 1950.

• Boise Valley, flood control, 1950.

• Cottonwood Creek Dam, flood control, 1966.

• Heise-Roberts Levee Extension, except constructed levees along the left bank of the Snake River downstream from the mouth of Henry's Fork, flood control, 1950.

• Weiser River, flood control, 1950.

• Whitebird Creek, flood control, 1950.

U.S., Italy renew anti-terrorism effort

WASHINGTON (AP) — Carefully avoiding recent disagreements over Italy's handling of the Achille Lauro hijacking, Attorney General Edwin Meese III and his Italian counterpart on Wednesday announced new efforts to combat terrorism.

Meese and Italy's Interior Minister Oscar Luigi Scalfaro told a news conference that terrorism would be included in the mandate of the Joint Italian-American Working Group to Combat Narcotics Trafficking and Organized Crime.

"We had discussions of three major topics: drug trafficking, organized crime and terrorism," Meese said at the conclusion.

Senate backs major trade legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, defying Reagan administration veto threats, approved by 60-39 on Wednesday night major trade legislation to force sharp cutbacks in textile and apparel imports flooding the U.S. market from Asia.

"Free trade will destroy America," Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., shouted as textile forces showed strength far exceeding their victory margins in Oct. 30 test votes. Critics called the measure "raw protectionism."

It is the major import bill advancing in Congress amid heightened concern over the nation's $123.3 billion trade deficit last year and resulting job losses. It now goes to the House, which has passed a tougher version.

As textile forces scored strong victories in preliminary skirmishes, some opponents junked proposed amendments, and Senate leaders impatient to move on to other matters telescoped a planned two-day debate into nine hours.

The outcome in the Republican-controlled Senate was a sharp rebuff to President Reagan's trade policy. But critics of the measure predicted that Reagan's veto would give the White House the last word.

Sen. Dan Evans, R-Wash., an outspoken critic of the bill, quoted Reagan as saying in a letter that he would "not sign any protectionist legislation that diminishes competition abroad or in the United States."

Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said the administration needed to take stronger action on the nation's trade problems before the textile bill "comes back for veto consideration."

With a green light from Thurmond; western senators, disgruntled over administration treatment of the copper industry, harnessed to the textile bill a measure designed to force new trade talks opposed by the White House.

With that, Sens. Pete Domenici, R-N.M.; and Jake Garn, R-Utah, previously critics of the administration-opposed textile bill, came into line.

The Senate voted 68-30 to kill a proposal by Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, to exempt Hong Kong, which he called "a paragon of fairness" in trade relations.

Reagan signs bill skirting overtime

WASHINGTON (AP) — President *Reagan signed legislation Wednes*day to skirt a Supreme Court ruling and allow states and local governments to continue offering time off in lieu of overtime pay.

"Without this legislation, the cost of services that state and local governments provide — police, firefighters and other services necessary to the success of any community — would have increased by as much as $3 billion per year," Reagan said in a written statement.

In a decision last February in a case known as Garcia versus San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, the Supreme Court ruled that state and local governments were required to pay overtime to all employes who worked more than 40 hours a week.

Government officials, worrying about huge overtime bills and the prospect of tax increases to cover higher costs, implored Congress for relief.

Under a compromise adopted by the House and Senate, compensatory time can be offered in lieu of overtime, but only if it is offered at time and a half, the same as overtime cash.

The legislation limits compensatory time to 240 hours, except for police, firefighters, emergency workers and seasonal employes. They could accumulate 480 hours.

Reagan signed the bill in a private ceremony, attended by members of Congress and others.

Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., who attended the ceremony, called the measure "half a loaf."

"It saves a great deal of money because otherwise they (governments) would not have been legally able to give compensatory time off," Wilson said. "But there is no question that the bill itself, by virtual of the compromise that mandates time and a half, is going to have a cost."

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said, "It is a fair compromise."

Networks to air Reagan's speech

NEW YORK (AP) — The major television networks plan live coverage of President Reagan's scheduled speech at 6 p.m. MST today, network spokesmen said Wednesday.

CBS, NBC, ABC and CNN will broadcast the speech, which is expected to last about 20 minutes, the networks said.

The three commercial broadcast networks also said they plan to delay their prime-time programming until Reagan's speech is completed so the shows will be seen in their entirety.

DAVID TATE
Alleged white supremacist

Jury finds Tate guilty of murder

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — David Tate, an alleged member of a white supremacist organization, was convicted of first-degree murder Wednesday for shooting a state trooper who stopped his weapons-filled van during a routine traffic check.

The jury deliberated less than two hours before returning the guilty verdict that could lead to a death sentence. First-degree murder in Missouri carries a mandatory death penalty or a sentence of life in prison with no chance of parole for 50 years.

Boone County Circuit Judge Frank Conley met with defense and prosecution lawyers after the verdict was returned. The jury of six men and six women will resume deliberations on the penalty phase of the case and give the judge a sentence recommendation later.

Tate, 23, of Athol, Idaho, sat quietly in his chair with his hands folded on his lap as Conley read the verdict. He watched without emotion as Conley polled each member of the jury.

About 100 spectators and reporters had packed the courtroom since the case went to the jury.

Tate was convicted of killing Missouri Highway Patrol Trooper Jimmie Linegar, 31, after he was stopped in a routine traffic check in southern Missouri April 15.

Linegar and Trooper Allen D. Hines, 35, were shot with a silencer-equipped machine pistol after they stopped Tate's van, which was later found to contain what authorities called an arsenal of weapons. Hines recovered and testified at Tate's trial.

Defense and prosecution lawyers told the jury in closing arguments that the case hinged on the issue of premeditation. The defense said during jury selection Monday that it would not deny that Tate shot and killed Linegar.

Public Defender Patrick Deaton said Wednesday that Tate had acted out of fear.

"David wasn't coolly reflecting. He was just getting more and more scared all the time," Public Defender Patrick Deaton said of Tate's state of mind when he was stopped by the troopers.

The prosecution, however, contended in its closing statement that Tate had time to think about his actions and knew what he was doing.

"The defendant was poised and ready to go," Prosecutor Jim Justus told the jurors. "His intentions and plans were already made. He decided on the 15th day of April 'I am not going to prison. I am going to kill those officers.'

"Fear of going to jail for a long time would make most of us scared," said Justus, who asked the jurors if they felt that was enough justification "to let him off for murder?"

The defense completed its case Tuesday with two witnesses — Tate's mother and a psychiatrist — after the prosecution had called a total of 10 witnesses.

Hearing set on bookstore

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — The state Senate Commerce and Labor Committee will conduct a hearing here next week to investigate complaints from Pullman merchants who say the expansion of Washington State University's Student Book Corporation is hurting their businesses.

Business owners have complained about the WSU store since its expansion from a textbook store into a full-service department store. The store has slowly been expanded during the past few years.

The Pullman Chamber of Commerce Legislative Committee voted Tuesday to form a committee to study university business operations. The committee, which will be composed of chamber members and WSU officials, will examine the university's business operations and how they may conflict with Pullman businesses, said Scott Huntley, a chamber member and WSU's director of governmental relations.

Baucus fights for unitary tax

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Montana's right to levy a "unitary tax" on multinational corporations operating within its boundaries would be enhanced by a bill introduced Tuesday in the U.S. Senate, Sen. Max Baucus said.

Baucus, a Democrat, said his bill was in answer to President Reagan's announcement Friday that his administration would try to ban the unitary tax as a method of taxing corporations.

Baucus called the administration proposal the "direct result of foreign pressure and intimidation."

The unitary method of taxation bases a company's state taxes on worldwide earnings rather than earnings within the state. Montana, Idaho, North Dakota, California, Alaska and New Hampshire have unitary taxes.

"The U.S. Supreme Court in 1983 upheld the unitary tax as a proper and fair method of taxation," Baucus said from the Senate floor. "The administration's plan would violate states' legitimate sovereign right to determine their own tax policies."

Baucus charged that the administration's move is to appease Great Britain, which has persistently objected to the unitary tax method.

A few months ago, the British Parliament authorized British tax authorities to take away tax credits for American companies doing business in Great Britain if they also operate in U.S. states with unitary taxes.

Baucus said his bill would retaliate against Great Britain if it goes ahead with that plan, which is set to go into effect at the end of this year.

"If they do, my bill would increase the withholding tax on British corporations that own stock in a U.S. company to the statutory 30 percent rate," he said.

A U.S.-Great Britain tax treaty sets the current rate at 5 or 15 percent, he added.

Baucus also wrote a letter to President Reagan Nov. 1, urging him not to seek legislation restricting the unitary tax.

Other senators signing the letter included John Melcher, D-Mont.; Idaho's two Republican senators, James McClure and Steve Symms; Alaska's two Republican senators, Ted Stevens and Frank Murkowski; Quentin Burdick, D-N.D.; Mark Hatfield, R-Ore.; Jake Garn, R-Utah; Carl Levin, D-Mich.; David Durenberger, D-Minn.; and Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

Sociological pains strike department

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The University of Utah has put its sociology department into "receivership" because the experts on how people function in groups weren't functioning well as a group.

Disarray in the department has prompted the school to freeze faculty hiring, halt graduate-student admissions and impose external rule, officials said Tuesday.

"This is a very complex case," said Irwin Altman, vice president for academic affairs. "The department has been ridden with conflict over the last 10 years. There is an inability to manage itself."

"We're looking for a department head outside the department to run it for one or two years," he said.

The department is essentially in receivership."

Woman identifies missing boy

PARMA (AP) — In early November, a Parma woman saw the face of a missing boy on television that she had seen before, in her neighborhood.

On Tuesday, the Canyon County Sheriff's Department found 4-year-old Michael D. Cook in Parma and arrested his mother on a charge of second-degree kidnapping. It had been two years since the boy's father attempted to exercise joint custody of his son but found the boy and the mother gone from their California home.

The arraignment of Minerva Cook, 25, on the kidnapping charge, originally scheduled for Wednesday, was postponed until today because of scheduling conflicts in 3rd District Court in Caldwell. She had been held overnight in the Canyon County Jail.

Day care regulations adopted

REXBURG (AP) — Starting Dec. 1, operators of child day care centers in Madison County must obtain a license and undergo background checks by the sheriff's office.

The Madison County Commission this week adopted regulations covering any individual or business providing day care for children from more than one family. Madison is one of several counties adopting its own regulations after the Idaho Legislature failed to agree on statewide rules.

Violation of the ordinance is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine up to $300 and six months in jail for each day the center operates without a license.

Fremont joins insurance pool

ST. ANTHONY (AP) — Fremont County will join other Idaho counties in obtaining liability insurance through a joint risk-management program.

Commissioner James Siddoway said the county's premium will be based on the number of claims filed against it in the past, the number of claims paid and the county budget.

Chubbuck may reject plant

CHUBBUCK (AP) — The Chubbuck City Council, leery of a proposed fabricating plant outside city limits, is talking about denying the 44,000-square foot plant access to city sewer lines.

"I don't want something put up there that we don't have some control of," said Councilman Tom Nield, who first suggested that the city refuse to hook up the proposed Western Fabricating plant to the city sewer line.

Western Fabricating produces pressure vessels and pipe fabricating equipment for storage of gas, oil, minerals and paper products.

On Tuesday, city officials seemed skeptical of providing city services — particularly sewer and fire services — to a plant outside city limits.

Zoo to acquire 2 new zebras

BOISE (AP) — The Boise Zoo will have two new zebras by the middle of next summer, thanks in large part to donations from Mountain Bell, its employees, and an anonymous donor, zoo manager Dave Wayne said.

Wayne said the zoo has arranged to buy a male and a female zebra for $5,000 from a dealer in Idaho Falls in July.

The new zebras will replace two that died in unrelated incidents earlier this fall. One was found dead of an intestinal ailment Sept. 23, and the other died Oct. 20 of a broken neck after being harassed by children, Wayne said.

Bean harvest drop offset by market price hike

BOISE (AP) — A significant reduction in planted acreage this season coupled with a slight decline in the average yield has dropped the anticipated dry bean harvest in Idaho by 16 percent, according to government analysts.

But the expected reduction in the harvest of some 40.5 million pounds to 206.5 million this year comes as market prices have strengthened by about 16 percent, picking up nearly $2.50 a hundredweight to over $17 in the last year.

Producers planted only 120,000 acres this season, curbing land devoted to the crop by 18,000 acres over last year's harvest and then abandoning another 2,900 acres before bringing in this year's crop.

The government's Crop and Livestock Reporting Service estimated the average yield this season, based on Nov. 1 field conditions, at 1,750 pounds per acre, about 40 pounds below last year's average.

Nationally, the crop is expected to hit 2.21 billion pounds with the yield averaging 1,452 pounds an acre. That is up 6 percent from 1984.

The Idaho sugar beet crop was estimated at 3.5 million tons, up about 200,000 tons from last year on the strength of an additional 8,000 acres planted in the crop as the yield is expected to remain constant at 23 tons an acre. The nationwide crop was forecast to be up 2 percent to just over 22.5 million tons.

But for grain farmers, the government analysts had more bleak news, reporting continued excessive stockpiles of major commodities.

Although the amount of grain in storage in Idaho alone was down slightly from last year, when barley production hit a record, stores remained high, the government reported, and nationwide the stockpile of wheat, barley, oats and corn were all significantly above the levels of a year ago — a further indication of the glut that has depressed market prices.

Idaho wheat stocks still stood at nearly 84 million bushels on Oct. 1, the government said, while barley stocks totaled 67.5 million bushels and oats in storage totaled 2.1 million. Corn in storage around the state rose another 53 percent over the year to 214,000 bushels.

Asbestos spurs move

BOISE (AP) — The possibility that aging asbestos insulation could create a health risk for employees is prompting the state to shut down for a year two floors of its Industrial Administration Building in downtown Boise.

"This is a purely preventative measure," Glenn Nichols, director of the Department of Administration said Wednesday in announcing the decision. "We are not reacting to a current problem. We are acting to prevent a future problem."

Nichols said the 200 workers on the top two floors of the four-story building face no immediate health threat from the substance, that has been linked to various diseases, but he said the floors will be vacated in January so the insulation can be removed. The process, expected to cost $2 million, will take about a year. The workers will be relocated in leased space during that period.

"Our only choices are to remove it now or wait until someone gets sick," he added. "We do not want to risk the health of our employees or the liability to the state of Idaho."

Sales tax hike gets support

BOISE (AP) — Legislators who held public meetings across the state this fall on tax issues say people support a sales tax increase and want local government to have more control over financial affairs.

State representatives Larry EchoHawk, D-Pocatello, and L. Ed Brown, R-Pocatello, predicted Tuesday that the 1986 Legislature would raise the sales tax to fund next year's state budget.

EchoHawk said more than 200 people attended meetings sponsored by himself, Brown, Rep. Don Loveland, R-Boise, and Rep. Tim Tucker, D-Porthill, on their Idaho Economic Recovery Act of 1986. There were "just a handful of negative responses," he said.

Senate Majority Leader Mark Ricks, R-Rexburg, said he did not think the Economic Recovery Act or any version of it would get out of committee.

"The bottom line on this is, it is just a plain tax increase," Ricks said. "When the economy is running at a very slow pace, it is hard to increase taxes."

Ricks said he didn't go to the legislators' meeting in Idaho Falls. "I just felt it was a waste of time," he said, adding that the only people who testified were from the public sector.

"They did not have the real rank-and-file citizens. I think they are churning their wheels."

EchoHawk conceded that many of the people who testified at the hearings represented local government and education. "But also there were a lot of average citizens who read about it (the meetings) in the paper and wanted to express their opinion."

Brown estimated that 70 percent of the people who testified represented the public sector. "To deny them a point of view ... is to deny a significant part of society input into the process."

EchoHawk said he and the other three lawmakers will be in Boise next week to review the transcript of the hearings and revise their bill.

Court hears lawyer-fee arguments

WASHINGTON (AP) — A lawyer-fee dispute from Idaho with potentially major importance to civil rights lawyers nationwide was aired in the Supreme Court on Wednesday.

The justices, during a 60-minute argument session, studied whether lawyer fees were awarded properly to a lawyer who negotiated a settlement in behalf of some 2,000 mentally and emotionally handicapped children in Idaho institutions.

State officials say the lawyer, Charles Johnson of Pocatello, Idaho, had agreed to forgo payment in return for a favorable settlement for the children.

Johnson sued the state in 1980 to improve conditions for the handicapped children. The lawsuit alleged that the children's civil rights were being violated by keeping them in adult psychiatric facilities where they were subject to potential sexual or physical abuse from older patients.

In 1983, a week before trial was scheduled and after years of pre-trial maneuvering, state officials agreed to settle the case by making the sought-after changes if they did not have to pay the childrens' legal fees.

Federal law generally assures lawyer fees to the prevailing side in civil rights cases.

Johnson said he would accept that agreement if it was approved as ethical by U.S. District Judge Marion J. Callister.

Callister upheld the agreement, denying reimbursement to Johnson by the state. But the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled last year that requiring a lawyer to give up payment in such a case created a conflict with the clients' interest.

Some cosmetic surgeons no longer implant silicon to enlarge the female bustline. Instead, they take sheets of tissue from the patient's abdomen and put it where they used to put big silicon. The woman gets larger breasts and a smaller waistline — but all with her own tissue.

TOM AND JERRY

Q. When I mention the original "Tom and Jerry" — and I don't mean the cartoon characters, what musicians am I talking about?

A. Simon and Garfunkel, no doubt. That's the name on their first recording.

Q. Where's the hottest, driest place in the world?

A. Death Valley. Some places are hotter and some places drier. But no place is both-er. Little wonder it's so dry. Evaporation rate is 200 inches a year, the rainfall less than two inches.

Q. That music man called "Little Richard" — what's his last name?

A. Penniman.

Boone looks to put hero on television

The Associated Press

LEOMINSTER, Mass. — An 80-year-old man who rescued a neighbor when his clothes caught fire has been praised by Pat Boone, and the singer wants to put the local hero on television.

Police say Charles J. Tabone saved the life of Arthur Gerry, 81, when Gerry's robe and hat caught fire in a rooming house bathroom in Leominster on Oct. 31.

Tabone had received a picture of Boone's family after he sent money to a charity years ago.

On Tuesday, he heard from Boone again.

In a letter, the singing star said a woman had sent him a newspaper clipping about the rescue and he was "touched and gratified by Tabone's action and neighborly response."

The star said he planned to resume production soon of a daily TV show called "Pat Boone USA," which includes a regular feature called "Good Neighbors of the Week."

That would give Tabone a chance to go before the cameras.

It will be a first for the New York native, who said he is "really kind of camera shy."

Chinese premier gets Hollywood treatment

HONOLULU — Premier Zhao Ziyang of the People's Republic of China arrived here early Wednesday for a one-day rest and sightseeing stop on his way home from a trip to Latin America.

The Chinese Premier had been in Los Angeles Tuesday. He toured a Hollywood movie studio, watched the space film "2010" and was given a canvas director's chair with his name printed in English.

Actor Robert Wagner and actress Stephanie Powers greeted Zhao at Universal Studios and guided the Chinese leader on the tour during the 2½-hour stopover.

Zhao and and his delegation had begun in the United States for ceremonies commemorating the 40th anniversary of the United Nations, before visiting South America.

Millionaire industrialist claim shocks relatives

LOS ANGELES — Industrialist Armand Hammer, whose personal fortune is estimated at $150 million, has filed a $665,000 claim against the estate of his late brother, a relative said.

The claim by the chairman of the Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum Corp., if successful, could bankrupt the surviving family of Victor Hammer, who died July 21 at age 83, Victor's daughter, Nancy Hammer Ellan, said Tuesday.

The claim, filed in Florida on Friday, seeks repayment of loans and interest from promissory notes signed by Victor Hammer for expenses dating back to 1976, Ms. Ellan's attorney, David A. Goldsmith, told The Daily News of Los Angeles in a telephone interview from New York.

"I can't believe anyone in his position would do this," Ms. Ellan said in Wednesday's editions of the newspaper. She was interviewed by phone from her home in Stamford, Conn. "I've asked him to withdraw the claim because I feel the money is desperately needed by us."

Hammer, through a spokeswoman in Los Angeles, described the legal skirmish as "a simple claim," which "will be determined in due course by the probate court." She did not elaborate.

Victor Hammer, a Palm Beach, Fla., resident and founder of the Hammer Galleries in New York, left an estate estimated at $750,000.

His wife, Ireene Ricker Hammer, 83, is confined to a wheelchair and has lived in a West Palm Beach nursing home since 1983, Ms. Ellan said.

Ms. Ellan, 59, her mother's court-appointed guardian, said six days after her father's funeral, she learned about the claim from her uncle's attorney.

"He's filing a claim against a helpless old woman," said Ms. Ellan who stands to inherit a trust from her father's estate after the death of her mother.

Hammer was in Florida on Tuesday to greet Prince Charles and Princess Diana who were to attend a $10,000-a-couple charity ball honoring him and benefiting Hammer's United World College in Montezuma, N.M.

Ms. Ellan said she asked her uncle to drop the claim in September.

"He offered to forfeit the interest," she said. "I was gasping."

Police hoping letters will curb prostitution

PORTLAND (AP) — Beginning Friday night, Portland police will begin taking down information to be used in "Dear John" letters to be sent to the homes of the owners of vehicles seen picking up prostitutes.

Police Chief Penny Harrington said the letters will be part of an effort to eradicate prostitution and street-level drug dealing in north and northeast Portland.

Other tactics include establishing special police squads to deal with prostitution and drug dealing, serving prostitution warrants at the homes of customers, reading the names of prostitutes' customers at City Council meetings and publishing the names of prostitution customers in some local newspapers.

The police program also includes funding for an organization to help prostitutes leave the street.

Ms. Harrington said at a Tuesday news conference that legal research over the last several months indicated Portland may be the first city in the country to send letters to customers of prostutites.

"We'll be blazing some new trails in doing this," she said.

She said the contents of the letters will depend on the specific case. Generally, the letters will say that the person's vehicle was seen picking up a known prostitute at a specific location and will notify the vehicle's owner that prostitution is a crime.

George Muller, co-chairman of the Eliot-King neighborhood's crime prevention committee, said he wished the program allowed people in the neighborhood to report the license numbers of vehicles seen picking up prostitutes.

"We've been castrated in our whole movement," Muller said. "Now they've taken away our only defense."

Judge jails man with 21 DUIs

BROCKTON, Mass. (AP) — A man who has been convicted of drunken driving 21 times since 1972 was sentenced to jail for failing to attend an alcoholism treatment program and driving without a license.

Brockton District Court Judge George N. Covett on Tuesday found Faustino J. Goncalves, a 45-year-old woodworker from Whitman, guilty of five counts of violating the terms of his probation and sentenced him to 3 years, 9 months and 10 days in jail.

Goncalves was charged with drunken driving in Whitman on Sept. 5 and Sept. 19. Police say he had been convicted 21 times before and had failed to report to court-ordered alcoholism treatment programs on several occasions.

He had also violated the terms of his probation by driving, said Whitman Lt. James Fox, who noted that Goncalves' license was revoked in Massachusetts and New York.

Angry alligator resists arrest

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — A Pinellas County sheriff's deputy trying to catch a jaywalker got slapped, knocked down and bitten, leaving a gash that needed 13 stitches.

The jaywalker was a 7-foot-long alligator.

"It's the first time I've gotten bitten, and it'll be the last," vowed Deputy Janice Shine, 38. "From now on, I'll be packing a big stick with a loop just for these kinds of situations."

Ms. Shine tried Tuesday to muzzle the alligator with a rope and pull it out of the busy intersection it was meandering across. The alligator slapped her with its tail, knocking her down, then bit her leg.

Recipient shows AIDS signs

PORTLAND (AP) — One of 10 people who received blood from a man exposed to AIDS is suffering from symptoms of the disease, the American Red Cross reported today.

Six of the 10 died from medical conditions not associated with AIDS and the remaining recipients and their sex partners are being tested, said Red Cross representative Dr. Frans Peetoom.

He said a man in one of the high risk groups for AIDS donated blood on seven different occasions before screening tests were given to blood donors. His blood was later found to contain the AIDS antibody, meaning he had been exposed to the disease.

A person who received the blood in 1983 now has AIDS Related Complex, a condition less severe but having many of the same symptoms of AIDS.

Israeli leader says he will fire Sharon

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres said Wednesday he intended to fire right-wing Cabinet minister Ariel Sharon, who has attacked his peace moves with Jordan. Sharon's dismissal could bring down the fragile coalition government.

Political factions were trying to work out a compromise to preserve the coalition between the prime minister's Labor party and the conservative Likud bloc, to which Sharon belongs.

After a Cabinet meeting that lasted nearly three hours, Sharon said he did not get a dismissal letter from Peres, and ministers were divided on whether the crisis threatening the government had been averted.

"I think there is hope of removing tensions that existed in the government," Sharon told reporters in a news conference broadcast live on Israel's state television after the Cabinet meeting.

ARIEL SHARON
Has blasted peace moves

Sharon said, "We are facing serious problems about growing terror, the economy ... a minister must express his views."

An aide to Peres, who spoke to reporters on condition of anonymity, said the prime minister read the Cabinet the letter of dismissal he had drafted and told the meeting he planned to fire Sharon from his post as trade and industry minister.

The aide gave the impression Peres did not intend to back down on his decision to fire Sharon, who has accused Peres of being "weak and spineless." But the aide did not rule out a compromise.

By Israeli law, a Cabinet resignation or dismissal cannot take effect until 48 hours after a formal letter is delivered. Communications Minister Amnon Rubenstein, whose liberal Shinui faction is allied with Labor, also said Peres did not give Sharon the letter of dismissal at the Cabinet meeting.

Israel television predicted there would be no decision before Thursday.

Sharon tried to ease the crisis earlier Wednesday by offering a partial apology. He expressed regret for any personal attacks on Peres but added: "I stand by my positions concerning the basic political issues."

He has sharply criticized the prime minister's overtures to Jordan, which include acceptance of an international forum for peace negotiations.

Peres gave the Cabinet a long list of reasons for firing Sharon, a former general who was a hero of the 1973 Middle East war, and said he would accept only an apology that expressed confidence in the prime minister, his aide said.

Sharon's dismissal could cause Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, the Likud leader, and the rest of his ministers to leave the Cabinet.

Envoy sees promise

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A special envoy sent by the archbishop of Canterbury to negotiate the release of American hostages held by Shiite Moslem extremists said Wednesday night he saw a "real opportunity for a breakthrough."

"I see some hope," said the envoy, Terry Waite, who successfully negotiated the release of Britons held in Iran and Libya.

"The fact that I'm here does indicate there's a possibility (of freeing the hostages," said Waite, who was flinged by Moslem militiamen and airport security officials upon his arrival. "There is a real opportunity for a breakthrough."

Waite, a special adviser to Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, the spiritual head of the Church of England, said after arriving from London that he was "here on humanitarian grounds because I want to see a resolution to this problem..."

Lebanese security guards and militiamen at the airport whisked the burly envoy through a scrambling throng of reporters and television crews.

He was taken through the terminal, ringed by militiamen linking arms, without immigration formalities. Yelling guards bundled Waite into a sedan. The car sped away with a rifle-toting militiamen hanging out the window and Waite jammed in the back seat between militiamen.

Before leaving London, the 46-year-old Waite termed his mission the most dangerous he has undertaken because his earlier efforts involved "an identifiable person or group or government."

Opponent promises trial of Marcos

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A leading opponent of Ferdinand E. Marcos said Wednesday that if he wins the Jan. 17 election he would give the president "due process of law," rewrite the constitution, and grant an amnesty to guerrillas.

An adviser to former Sen. Salvador Laurel said "due process of law" meant that Marcos would be tried for alleged crimes committed against the people during his 20-year rule.

Laurel made the statement after meeting with Corazon Aquino, widow of an assassinated Marcos foe, Benigno Aquino. They are regarded as the two top contenders to run against Marcos in the spot election the president called in response to criticism of his government. His current term was not due to end until 1987.

Laurel said if he is elected, his government would release political prisoners and grant amnesty to all political offenders, including members of the insurgent communist New People's Army.

He said he believes 90 percent of the rebels are not communists and that they would give up their arms under a new democratic government.

Tass says Reagan interview cut to fit page

MOSCOW (AP) — The government newspaper Izvestia deleted parts of an interview with President Reagan only to make the text fit the page, the official news agency Tass reported. It said the deletions were "very insignificant."

Tass's comments Tuesday were a response to suggestions by White House spokesman Larry Speakes and the Voice of America that Izvestia censored parts of Reagan's interview with four Soviet journalists.

"Naturally, during the publication of such a long interview the editorial board had to compress its text somewhat — to a very insignificant extent," Tass said.

"And every unbiased reader will admit that all of Reagan's ideas and views without exception found adequate reflection in the interview published by Izvestia," the news agency said.

Reagan gave the interview to four Soviet journalists — on Oct. 31. Izvestia devoted a full page to it four days later and filled a second page with criticism of Reagan's remarks.

Equipment auction to raise cash for hotline

By BOB FREUND
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A new hotline to aid troubled farmers in the Magic Valley is using farm equipment to put down some roots.

Organizers of the Southern Idaho Family Farm Hotline will auction off agricultural machinery such as tractors and tool bars later this month to raise some operating cash for the volunteer effort, said originator Dick Parrott of Twin Falls.

An allied fund-raising group called Southern Idaho Farmers Involved in Troubled Economies hopes to raise at least $3,000 with the auction and other promotions to pay for the hotline's operations this winter, Parrott said.

He has collected more than 20 items from Magic Valley agribusinesses for the auction since the hotline started taking calls Oct. 14, many of them on consignment.

The counseling service is run from the Gooding-area home of Susan and Jerry Westendorf, who currently are paying most of its expenses. The cost of a telephone recorder for messages has wound up on their credit card; and their phone bill is going up because of return phone calls to farmers asking for assistance, Susan Westendorf said.

Although now a volunteer effort, FITE hopes eventually to hire a paid staff person, expand its bank of volunteer experts, publish a newsletter and hold seminars for farmers and the general public, Parrott said.

Using grants for vocational education, the new hotline system also may generate some tapes to help start similar crisis phones in other areas of the state, he said.

The service is a regional pilot project of the Idaho Family Farm Hotline, launched early this fall, said Rick Phillips, who runs it from the Idaho Department of Agriculture in Boise.

"We're setting up regional hotlines that the state hotline can refer callers to," he said.

Both the Idaho and Southern Idaho hotlines provide immediate moral support to family farm members. They find out their problems and then direct the farmers to volunteer experts who can help them. The hotline stresses farmer-to-farmer counseling, but also has access to professionals in legal, fiscal and mental health fields.

The Southern Idaho hotline's number is 886-7570.

The service has fielded seven or eight calls so far, said Susan Westendorf, who is a professional counselor. All have involved financial problems, she said Wednesday.

The benefit auction is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Nov. 23 at the Twin Cinema parking lot, Eastland Drive and Kimberly Road in Twin Falls. The Twin Cinema is holding a matinee showing the movie "Annie" and donating the proceeds, Parrott said.

The auction will accept donations or consignments of unsecured equipment. More information is available by phoning the hotline itself or by phoning the Twin Falls County Farm Bureau at 733-7212.

P & Z OKs mixer

But neighbors are left 'fumed'

By ANNETTE CARY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls City Planning and Zoning Commission voted 6-3 Tuesday to allow an asphalt mixer to remain on Addison Avenue West, to the dismay of many neighbors who complained of fumes from the operation.

LaMar Orton, the city's community development director, said that in May he had allowed Keith Sligar and Rick Olander to place portable asphalt hot plant equipment on property located a half-mile west of Grandview Drive. The land lies in a C-2 zone, the least-restrictive commercial zone.

Neighbors complained that the operation was not suitable for the neighborhood and asked the commission to revoke the permit.

Elsa Ullman, who owns property across the street from the asphalt mixer, said that the first time she visited her property while the mixer was running, she was "nauseated, sickened, absolutely scared because I began to drive hazardously" and had to pull off the road.

She estimated that she was sickened at least 12 times. She now has a renter for her property, but he has threatened to leave if the smell is offensive when the construction season begins again, she said.

Paul Roberts, who owns the A-OK RV Park near the hot mix operation, said his business had already been hurt by fumes in the neighborhood.

"People stop," he said. "They smell this in the area. They sit there a few minutes and they drive away. . . . We have invested thousands of dollars and don't like to see it go down the drain."

He and his wife, Ruby, said they have tried closing up their house and a ceramic shop she owns, but that "the smell doesn't dissipate."

Ann Allen, who lives on a farm in an agricultural zone a quarter-mile north of the hot mix equipment, said she and her six children smell the asphalt every time the wind blows in her direction.

"We like our home in the country and the clean fresh air, but this year we didn't have a lot of that once the plant started up," she said.

Dwight Bell also complained about the smell from the plant, saying that after spending two or three hours picking pears across the street he became nauseated and lightheaded.

However, Stan Fish, who works 100 yards to the north, said that workers there had not had any pro-

Superintendents warn of move to 'Dark Ages'

Leaders get message of school woe

By JANE ROBISON
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Educationally, Idaho may be returning to the Dark Ages rather than progressing toward the 21st Century, area school superintendents told a small group of area business leaders and legislators Wednesday.

"We can't keep the attitude of 'let's do more with less,'" said Shoshone Superintendent Tim Adsit during a Region IV superintendents meeting in Twin Falls. "We've got to look at revenues rather than what's left to be cut. We're going back to the Dark Ages."

Adsit was one of a dozen superintendents from the Magic Valley who met with State Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, and State Rep. Donna Scott, R-Twin Falls, and business leaders about the funding problems facing schools. And their message of woe reached a few receptive ears.

The checklist of problems testing schools ranged from an inability to attract quality teachers to deteriorating buildings.

Superintendent Sheldon Kovarsky, Filer, said Idaho will become either "a dumping ground for teachers who can't get jobs with other states," or a training ground for college graduates who gain experience in Idaho and move to states with higher pay.

In addition, the teachers who stay are being asked to teach 40 minutes more a day, but with no salary increase, said Kimberly Superintendent Richard Bauscher. "The problem is how do you keep morale up when you want more out of teachers, but you don't want to pay them?" he asked.

Bauscher, who did his doctoral work in Washington, said Idaho is viewed as a "backward state" educationally by its Northwest neighbors.

Noh, vice chairman of the Education and Agricultural Affairs Committee, said it was "inevitable" that the Legislature will respond with some kind of revenue increase for education. If not this year, he said voters will elect representatives next year who will respond.

Not only legislators, but businessmen realize the importance of education, said Curtis Eaton, president of Twin Falls Bank & Trust. Eaton said the first consideration of a prospective business is the quality of the schools in the town.

Scott, however, said the morale in the private sector is also low, and schools may have to make do with what they've got. "When times are difficult, I hate to think we can't improve something," she said. "We all think there's never enough money to do what we want."

Judge denies district motion in suit

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Fifth District Judge Daniel Hurlbutt Tuesday denied a request by the Twin Falls School District for a judgment in its favor and against a woman who claimed her daughter was injured from cosmetics applied during a class.

Susan Jackson filed an $800,000 lawsuit in March 1985 against the School District, teacher Jennifer Ingram, the Mary Kay Cosmetics company of Dallas, Texas, and its consultant, Kathy Taylor of Kimberly.

As a result of Hurlbutt's action, the case still is pending. No trial date has been set, according to court officials.

Jackson alleged that her 14-year-old daughter, Jody Sue, had been injured Oct. 16-17, 1984, after applying Mary Kay cosmetics to her face during a home economics class at O'Leary Junior High School. Jackson claimed the school was negligent because it failed to warn the students about possible dangers and ask the parent's permission for the demonstration.

The defendants countered that the children were told in advance of the demonstration, which was voluntary.

At a Tuesday hearing attorney Jacqueline S. Wakefield of Twin Falls argued on behalf of the district and Ingram on their request for a judgment that would dismiss the claim.

Wakefield said the school and Ingram were immune from liability under the Idaho Tort Claims Act because their actions were aspects of the "planning and operational decision-making" required to do their job.

Under the O'Leary policy, permission slips weren't required for such in-class demonstrations, and teachers had discretion over daily classroom activities, Wakefield said. Allowing the plaintiff's claim would hinder the educators' job because they would be busy issuing warnings about various potential hazards, including the kind of soap in restrooms or towels in gym class.

In addition, the girl was old enough to know the possible outcome of her actions because she was aware she had allergy problems, Wakefield said.

William Faylor of Idaho Falls, who represented Taylor and the cosmetics company, said the girl applied the cosmetic herself.

Penelope Parker-Kimber, who represented the Jacksons, argued against the judgment. She contended the case against the School District and teacher still was viable because there were questions to be answered that weren't already on the record.

The defendants were asking the court to expand the government immunity of the tort act to a third party — in this case, the Mary Kay company and Taylor, Parker-Kimber said.

Hurlbutt denied the school's request and added that the claim of negligence against the School District and Ingram will remain.

He also dismissed the plaintiff's request for punitive damages against the defendants. Jackson's attorney previously admitted that punitive damages were not applicable.

Anderson claims student support for removing porn from bookstores

By DEAN S. MILLER

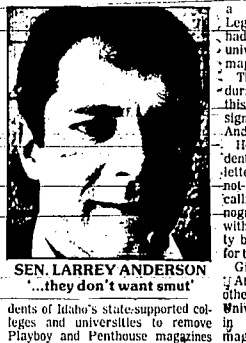
TWIN FALLS — State Sen. Larrey Anderson, R-Twin Falls, says he is getting student support for his plan to remove pornographic magazines from college bookstores around the state.

"Kids wanna rock — but they don't want smut," Anderson said in a Tuesday press release. Anderson said he recently received a petition signed by about 80 students at the University of Idaho who want Playboy and Penthouse magazines taken out of bookstores at state-supported schools.

Anderson said Wednesday he had not solicited the support and was sent the petitions by a UI law student, who could not be reached for comment Wednesday.

The petition reads, "We the undersigned, as university students and/or citizens of Idaho, support State Senator Larrey Anderson's resolution which would direct presidents of Idaho's state-supported colleges and universities to remove Playboy and Penthouse magazines from distribution at school bookstores."



SEN. LARREY ANDERSON
'...they don't want smut'

Anderson said he never introduced a formal resolution to the Legislature last winter, but that he had called on Idaho's college and university presidents to remove the magazines from college bookstores.

The petition was left out on a table during course registration earlier this year and collected the 80 signatures in only a few hours, Anderson said.

He sent the petition to UI president Richard Gibb this week in his letter, Anderson told Gibb: "This is not a 'free speech' issue. I am not calling for a total ban on these pornographic materials. I simply agree, with your students, that a university bookstore is not the proper place for their distribution."

Gibb was out of town Wednesday.

Anderson called on students at the other state schools to follow the University of Idaho example, saying in his press release: "These magazines exploit women, men and sometimes even children. If they have any place at all, it is not on a university campus."

Chadband move brought cash

'Fonda strategy' continues

By DEAN S. MILLER
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Second District Congressional candidate State Rep. J.F. Chadband, R-Idaho Falls, is still campaigning against Jane Fonda in his bid to unseat Democratic incumbent Richard Stallings.

A conservative political action group called Americans for a Sound Foreign Policy has thrown its weight behind Chadband on the basis of his criticism of Stallings for appearing in a photograph with Fonda.

"Her activities with foreign policy have been a burr in their sides," Chadband said Wednesday. The group has promised to work for him and has circulated a fund-raising letter to its Idaho members which raised about $500 for the Idaho Falls businessman.

Chadband was in Twin Falls Wednesday for a breakfast meeting with his finance director, Robert Paine. The Chadband for Congress campaign has raised about $12,000, $4,000 of which came from the letter that criticized Stallings for having his picture taken with Fonda.

Following Idaho Falls broadcaster Mel Richardson's lead, Chadband is organizing a committee of 100 Idahoans to each raise $1,000 for his campaign. Richardson is another Idaho Falls Republican candidate for the 2nd Congressional District Seat.

Chadband said he will be pushing for the privatization of government services in his campaign. Voters will see the need for his business know-how in the management of government, he said.

To bone up on selling that appeal to voters, he will fly to Washington, D.C., today to enroll in a National Republican Congressional Committee campaign school.

Like Richardson, Chadband said the Ada county portion of the district will be critical in this race. The three candidates in Idaho Falls will dilute the usually strong vote from the southeast corner of the state, he said. Jerome attorney Dan Adamson and State Rep. Gary Robbins, R-Dietrich, will split the vote in the Magic Valley and the winner should rely on the Boise region to pull him through, Chadband said.

Chadband said a rating of him by State Sen. Dane Watkins, R-Idaho Falls; and Robbins will show that his legislative voting record is the most conservative of the three. He expects this will help distinguish him from the pack of Republicans seeking the nomination.

Limo luxury

Vegas show offers the best in indulgent driving

By ROBERT MACY
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — The salesman in the fancy three-piece suit opened the door to reveal elegant velour interior, a color TV mounted in the corner, Persian rugs on the floor — and declared his limousine a steal at $33,900.

Forty limousines valued at more than $1.5 million were on display at a Strip resort this week, providing a heady view of the ultimate in driving luxury.

The limousine industry reported $240 million in sales last year, double that of 1983. And 1985 figures will be even higher, according to Ty Bobit, publisher of Limousine and Chauffeur Magazine, the show promoter.

Limo gazers dressed in classy cowboy suits and jeans, tuxedos and mini-skirts — mingled with strolling violinists, sipping champagne and viewing options missing from your basic four-door sedan.

Color television sets were a standard item in virtually every car. Other features included intercom systems, champagne coolers, electronic drink dispensers, moonroofs and velour- or leather-lined rumble seats.

For the budget-conscious, there were sleek models in the $30,000 range. For those less inhibited by sticker price, there were units exceeding $100,000.

The star of the show, a 50-foot, $250,000 giant complete with its own swimming pool, swept imposingly across a circular drive in front of Caesars Palace, where the show was held.

The builder, Ultra Limousine Corp. of La Palma, Calif., has been offered $500,000 for the car by a Japanese firm, according to spokesman Craig Hoelzel.

Hoelzel said the giant 22-passenger limo has "started a whole new wave of clientele" for Ultra, which builds about 200 limousines a year.

"We have a couple of cars in the shop now being built for a Saudi Arabian customer," Hoelzel said. "They will have eight doors and hold 15 people. He wants to use them as hunting vehicles. They will have four sunroofs. The buyer wants to be able to stand up in the limos and go hunting in them."

While there are off-beat buyers for fancy limos, the major customers remain limousine services, Bobit said, with 70 percent of the fancy cars purchased for that growing industry.

Paul Apostolides of El Cajon, Calif. doted over his extravagant new $85,000 "super stretch limo," built by Executive Coach Builders in Springfield, Mo.

Apostolides, 40, got into the limousine business seven years ago "because I liked meeting people." His company, Paul the Greek's Limo, grossed $8,000 its first year. He expects to gross $500,000 this year, catering to parties, weddings, sightseers, sports fans, celebrities, athletes, tours and special events.

He has provided limousines for sports stars traveling the 125 miles between San Diego and Los Angeles who prefer the plush trappings of a limousine to comparatively-mundane team travel.

"There's a lot of profit in this business, but there's also a lot of headaches and a lot of tension," Apostolides said. "When people want a limousine, they want it done right. So you pay your dues in this business. But it's a people business, and people are what life's all about."

Bobit's first limousine show was in Atlantic City last December.

Limousine buyers from Alaska to Florida were on hand for the Las Vegas show this week, and were in a buying mood, Bobit said.

"One company said they received checks for 11 cars in the first two days of the show," Bobit said Wednesday. "The industry is experiencing very strong times."

Bobit said 6,000 limousines were sold in 1984 at an average of $40,000 each.

Stallings repels Adamson's criticism of staff placement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defending his decision to keep the bulk of his staff in Idaho rather than the nation's capital, Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, said his constituents in the 2nd Congressional District deserve the same kind of service voters get in more urban states.

The freshman congressman is completely dismissing claims by potential Republican challenger Dan Adamson that he has concentrated his staff in Idaho so he can campaign for re-election full-time.

"That's just Dan Adamson," Stallings said. "The 2nd District is as large as the state of Pennsylvania, and they have 23 members (congressmen) in the same square mileage. Most of them have just one or two offices because their districts are located in large cities."

Such a system would be "terribly wrong" in Idaho, he said. "The people in this district ought to have the same service as those who live in the Eastern districts."

The Rexburg Democrat has field offices in Twin Falls, Idaho Falls, Pocatello, and Boise. However, as a result of staffing all those offices, he has fewer Washington staffers.

DAN ADAMSON
Possible GOP challenger

RICHARD STALLINGS
Most staffers are in Idaho

"Stallings has forgotten his Washington staff almost entirely, and moved almost all of his staff to Idaho to wage a 24-hour-a-day re-election campaign," Adamson, a former Jerome County prosecutor and unsuccessful challenger of former Congressman George Hansen in the 1984 GOP primary, said recently.

However, Stallings said he was happy with his staff arrangement and felt he was getting a lot accomplished in Washington.

"It certainly has not been an inconvenience," he said. "We've got an excellent staff, and we're getting the work done. I'm very pleased that way."

County property-tax time arrives next week

TWIN FALLS — County property owners will find 1985 tax bills in their mailboxes beginning next week.

Dec. 20 is the deadline for payment of the first installment of real and mobile-home taxes and the full amount of taxes on personal property, according to Twin Falls County Treasurer Juanita Stettler.

Deliquent taxpayers are subject to a 2-percent penalty and 12-percent interest.

Stettler said tax payments may be made by mail or at the treasurer's office. Because of the short collection period, the treasurer's office will be open every weekday until Dec. 20 from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., including through the lunch hour.

Normally county offices are open to the public from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Stettler added that people should telephone her office if they don't receive their tax notice within the next week or two.

Any questions about valuations on property — which is used to figure the amount of taxes due — may be directed to the assessors's office, Stettler said. By law, the deadline for protesting valuations is long past.

Attorney says report shows no basis for KPD prosecution

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County Prosecuting Attorney K. Ellen Baxter said Wednesday that she has reviewed a 20-page report and 30 pages of exhibits from an investigation of the Kimberly Police Department and fails to find sufficient evidence for prosecution.

Baxter said there were nine allegations covered in the report. The first seven occurred beyond the statute of limitations. Two others, alleging the department failed to keep sufficient records of police evidence held in the department, do not warrant criminal prosecution.

She found insufficient evidence of failure to keep inventories, and there appears to be no intent to violate the law.

"I did some checking after reviewing the report and it appears that if inventories were not properly maintained the situation has now been corrected," she said.

Baxter said she and Russ Reneau of the Attorney General's office, who headed the investigation, agreed not to release contents of the report yet. She returned the report to Reneau Wednesday with a letter explaining her decision. In the letter, she recommended the report be sent to the Kimberly City Council, since the council initiated the investigation.

The City Council will have an opportunity to make the investigation report public if members desire, she said.

Baxter said the attorney general's report recommended no charges on the first seven allegations covered in the investigation, because of the time element and the fact they no longer fall within the statute of limitations. Some date back to 1977, she said.

On the other two, she said, the investigating agency recommended "the prosecuting authority review the information and consider the merits of filing a criminal action."

"I have reviewed the merits of the two other charges," Baxter said, "and my decision is that I will not prosecute."

Baxter said she is not asking for a special prosecutor on the case — an option considered earlier.

"If prosecution were appropriate I would personally prosecute the case," she added.

Kimberly Mayor Ron Jones, who asked for the investigation last May, said Wednesday he could not comment until he has had an opportunity to see the report.

"I guess that is her decision and she probably made it to the best of her ability," Jones said.

Police Chief Jim Campbell, who has been the target of the investigation, said he is also reserving comment but will have a statement later.

Ted Wasko, president of the Kimberly City Council, explained he was not surprised by the prosecuting attorney's decision.

"In fact, that is just the way I figured it would turn out before we started the whole thing," he added.

At one point Wasko and Councilmen Sterling Crothers, who serves as police commissioner, and Avis Allen requested the investigation be stopped, after they learned the mayor had authorized it without consulting councilmembers. Wasko said then that he had no objection to an investigation, but he didn't like it being kept a secret from the councilmembers. The councilmen learned about it when they were contacted by investigators. Later the entire council agreed to ask the attorney general's office to continue the investigation, along with an investigation by Twin Falls Police Department Detective Garry Corder.

Storm heads out of ravaged Utah; avalanche leaves 2 skiers critical

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Two men were trapped in an avalanche Wednesday while cross-country skiing on unstable snow left behind by a powerful storm that wreaked havoc on Utah roads and power lines a day earlier.

A Salt Lake County sheriff's deputy said the two were in critical condition in local hospitals Wednesday night after being buried in the snow at least 20 minutes.

Deputy Nathan Ridge said at least six people were skiing near Alta ski resort in Big Cottonwood Canyon when the avalanche occurred.

Doyle Murray, 24, Salt Lake City, was airlifted to the University of Utah Health Sciences Center, where he was listed in "very critical condition," Ridge said. The other victim, Timothy B. Wiggins, 29, also of Salt Lake City, was airlifted to Alta View Hospital and transferred to LDS Hospital here, he said.

Ridge said no other members of the cross-country ski party were trapped in the avalanche, which was about 200 feet wide, 500 feet long and two feet thick.

Each member of the party was wearing a radio transmitter which helped other skiers find their buried friends, he said. Wiggins' wife, Julie, a nurse at LDS Hospital, administered CPR on her husband until help arrived, Ridge said.

He said the two helicopters which flew to the area to rescue the victims were hampered by snow and low visibility.

Meanwhile, the winter storm relaxed its grip and was moving east toward Colorado and Wyoming, the National Weather Service said.

There was less than a 20 percent chance of snow in Salt Lake City Wednesday night, with partly cloudy skies forecast for Thursday. Decreasing snow showers were anticipated statewide.

"We have got this monster storm moving out of the area," said William Alder, meteorologist-in-charge of the National Weather Service's Salt Lake office. "It has weakened considerably."

Temperatures, however, were expected to remain low until Friday. "It looks like it will be nice for football Saturday. But it's all downhill from Sunday on," as another cold front sweeps in from the north, he said.

The first major storm of th season added two to three feet to a one-foot snow base at most Utah ski resorts, Alder said.

Brighton Ski Resort announced that on Thursday it would become the first of the state's resorts to open for business.

blems with the smell.

Louise Harral, an 86-year-old woman whom Olander brought to the meeting, said that she often sits in her yard across the street from the plant and had no problems with a smell after the first three times the plant ran.

Olander said there had been some start-up problems with the operation, but they had been worked out. Olander owns OK Paving and is a co-owner of Olander-Sligar Hot Mix.

When the plant was set up, oil leaked into the drum and had to be burned. But the plant has since passed federal Environmental Protection Administration emission tests and been in compliance with all regulations.

Olander said he has added a smokestack, following complaints of neighbors, and now steam dissipates in 35 or 40 feet.

Ditch burning and field harrowing create a far greater pollution problem in the area than his asphalt mixing does, he said. He has operated the plant only 23 times since the operation started Aug. 14, he said.

Several commissioners said they had visited the plant and noticed no offensive smell. Commission Chairman Bill Wright said he thought that 23 days was not long enough for a fair test.

He and Gary Bond, Joan Brawley, Tom Moore, Greg Ruddell and Les Poe voted not to revoke Olander's authorization to operate the plant on Addison Avenue.

Commissioner Mary Turner argued that the authorization set an unsatisfactory precedent and other hot mix plants would have to be allowed in C-2 zones.

She and commissioners John Bonnelt and Chris Valence voted to revoke authorization of the hot mix operation.

Neighbors said they planned to appeal the decision to the Twin Falls City Council.

Abortion debate may cut area center funds

TWIN FALLS — The Family Planning Center that does breast cancer screening and sex education programs run by the South Central District Health Department may be in jeopardy of closing, a department official said Wednesday.

Cheryl Juntunen, physical health director with the local Health Department, said the controversy over abortion funding in the U.S. House of Representatives may mean no money for the local Family Planning Center.

Juntunen urged board of health members to write Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, who is undecided on the funding bill. Juntunen said the funding bill for Title X money, used for Family Planning, is sponsored by Rep. Jack Kemp, R-New York, and "may not get out of committee."

"It's ironic that this is being used as a scapegoat for abortion when we're really an abortion prevention program," she said.

Last year 2,000 women from the Magic Valley received screening for breast cancer and other forms of cancer, and venereal disease, along with family planning counseling.

"Without this program, we're going to have a real problem," she said. "For every dollar spent on family planning, we're saving $3 in tax money for other programs."

State plans to test homes' radon gas levels

The Associated Press
and The Times-News

BOISE — Up to 1,000 Idaho homes may be tested next year for radioactive radon gas, if the state Division of Environment can get the money for it.

Radon is a natural gas produced by the radioactive decay of uranium. Reseach indicates that it can cause lung cancer, said Dr. Fritz Dixon, chief of the state Bureau of Preventative Medicine.

A radon-testing program earlier this year, sponsored by Bonneville Power Administration, was conducted in 50 Idaho homes. It showed levels as high as 30 picocuries per liter of air. Levels above 5 picocuries are considered a cancer risk.

The program revealed that eight homes in Hailey have high levels of radon gas, and a subsequent test conducted in October of 20 other structures, including schools, homes and public buildings, showed that radon gas is present in many of them.

Bob Funderburg, manager of the radiation control office for the Division of Environment, said tests in the Wood River Valley showed "some very low (readings) and others relatively high." Those with high readings should be looked into more closely, he said.

If the state study is funded, other homes in the Twin Falls area and surrounding counties, which were not included in the initial program, will be studied, he added.

Funderburg said if 10 picocuries of radon were in a house, its occupants would have a one in 50 chance of death by lung cancer, assuming they spent 75 percent of their time in the house.

One picocurie of radon could mean a one in 500 chance of lung cancer death, he said.

"We need to look and see how much of a problem we have in Idaho," said Dixon. "This would be the first study of its kind" in the state, he said.

Officials said they planned to charge homeowners $10 for a radon inspection, because the state does not have money to make the tests free.

Dixon said the BPA-sponsored test could not be used as an accurate indicator of the state's potential radon problem. He said only 50 homes were tested, and the study also tested only homes weatherized to retain heat.

He said weatherized homes tend to have lower levels of radon gas than those not highly insulated.

Dixon said Idaho homes found to have high radon levels would be dealt with individually to see what can be done to reduce the levels.

In some cases, all that needs to be done to reduce the levels is to open side vents along the house," he said.

The gas tends to collect in crawl spaces, basements and attics. There is little information about what types of houses are more likely to give off radon than others. But Dixon said houses covered by earth or built with certain types of stone should be suspect.

Homeowners who want to test for radon in their homes can send a check for $10 to the Radiation Control Section, Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, Statehouse, Boise, ID 83720.

The department will send a testing canister which must be placed inside the house for seven days. Test results then take a few weeks to be analyzed, Funderberg said.

He warned that there is a liability involved once the test is conducted.

"Once a person finds out they have a high radon count, they are legally obligated to tell the buyer when they sell the house," Funderberg said.

Scenes like this were common in the Magic Valley Wednesday. Most parts of the valley, though not all, escaped strong winds and drifting. JEROME — Jerome School Board members wrestled with the problem of how to overcome a budget deficit of $456,675 as they reviewed the 1984-85 audit report Monday.

The report, presented by Ron Rogers, of LeForgee, Rogers and Evans, showed an operating loss of $198,872 for the previous year, with a $257,803 negative fund balance beginning the current fiscal year.

Superintendent Richard Kugler blamed part of the problem on deferred taxes and accrued employee benefits.

Rogers said the school district needs to get the balance back to a "break even" status.

"You need to have a fund balance, otherwise you can't pay bills without borrowing," he said.

Trustee Ken Baumgartner questioned Rogers about possible dealing with the situation over a period of four or five years.

"We need to make sacrifices somewhere," Baumgartner said.

He suggested that when the district prepares its budget next spring, anything not absolutely necessary be seriously looked over and possibly cut.

Both Kugler and Baumgartner agreed the school system is "about as lean as it could be." The district is economical as far as salary and benefits were concerned, Kugler added.

Kugler said the district has $25,000 in the contingency reserve and may be able to save $50,000 this year. He said $120-125,000 is needed per year to get the district budget balanced again.

"It's a real thought-provoking action that the board is going to have to take," said Chairman Nancy Churchman.

Kugler said he hopes to get some relief when the Legislature convenes after the first of the year.

"We'll have to borrow unless the Legislature takes care of it in January," he said, adding the money could be generated by an increase in the sales tax.

In other business:

- Board Chairman Nancy Churchman was elected to another one-year term.
- Kugler was given a raise to $45,000 per year.
- The board approved a request to allow Jerome High School students to attend Twin Falls High School for the second semester.

TLC turns out key ingredient in cattle midwifery

Diana Hooley
Country neighbors

It's one thing to be an expectant father with one wife and one child on the way; it's quite another to be responsible for a whole herd of pregnant females. To further complicate the problem these soon-to-be-mothers' warm and sterile maternity ward is an icy patch of alfalfa down in the south 80. Attending their needs is my husband, rancher-cum-nanny, Dale.

For my part, I'm quite content to be a distant observer in these delicate matters. Dale goes out every morning to see if we have any new calves during the night. Sometimes he comes in smiling, stopping just short of passing the cigars, and informs me, "We've got another one."

I'm always glad to hear everything's going well over in obstetrics. One evening last week, though, Dale came through the kitchen door, shook the snow off his shoes and said, "I need some help. Got a calf, born a couple of hours ago and limp as a rag."

"What's wrong?"

"Mama doesn't have enough milk. It happens sometimes with first run heifers. I don't want to lose that calf. He's a big, strong, healthy-looking bull calf."

My immediate inclination was to call the vet. Dale looked at me like I'd just stepped out of a taxi in downtown New York. City girl that I was, it hadn't occurred to me the vet wouldn't be any more capable of shaking milk out of the teats of that cow than we were.

"We could try milking another cow," he said. "I think we've got a rubber calves nipple at the barn. Would you go get a quart Pepsi bottle and sterilize it for me?"

This solution to our problem conjured up some pretty grim images in my mind; visions of me holding some cantankerous cow's rear flank in a half nelson while Dale tries to milk her, aiming the squirt toward the tiny mouth of a pop bottle. Nooo thanks. I tried to offer some, what I considered, well-thought-out, alternate solutions.

"Why don't we just get a pail and give that calf the cow's milk we've got in the fridge? Two percent's supposed to be better for people; it's bound to be good for cows."

Thankfully, my husband is a patient man. "I think we've been over this before," he said reasonably, "but newborn calves need the colostrum from their mother's milk to thrive. Whole, 2 percent, buttermilk, and chocolate milk do not contain colostrum."

Well, I knew that. He didn't have to tell me THAT, for heaven's sakes.

Needless to say, I was relieved when Dale decided to borrow some powdered calf replacement milk from a fellow cattleman and neighbor rather than milk another nursing cow. (Our neighbor, Amos, is getting older, but you can tell he still knows cows and the rudiments of cattle midwifery.

Amos was very thorough in his preparation of the calf formula. A big concern was getting the exact measurement of Replacer in the mixing bottle. No nuclear chemist was ever more careful than Amos measuring and mixing ingredients in the kitchen of his ranch home.

He heated the water, testing the temperature of it several times with the tip of his finger. Then he added the milk powder.

"What you have to do is get it a little too hot, so by the time it sloshes around in the pickup and you get out to the field, it's just right."

With the wind howling and the temperatures dropping, Dale gave the wasted calf the milk replacer. Next morning, he happily reported the calf was up and kicking around. What he humbly failed to mention was that this was all due to the efforts of a couple of crusty cattle ranchers imbued with more than their share of TLC.

Gooding forms new bond panel

By JaNENE BUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — Gooding County officials are forming a new board to handle applications for tax-free industrial revenue bonds in the county, according to Robert Thackeray, chairman of the Gooding County Board of Commissioners.

He said Tuesday that a resolution to form an Industrial Revenue Bond Board is being drafted by county attorney Lynn Nelson.

The board must be in place before businessmen can qualify for the tax-free investment bonds which can be used to raise money for industrial and business development.

Thackeray said both the Wendell and Gooding Chambers of Commerce have received inquiries from business developers about the possibility of using the bonds.

"It could be a way to attract new economic growth to the area," he said.

Representatives of Gooding, Wendell and Hagerman met with the commission last week to discuss the bonds.

Rupert seniors await groundbreaking of center

By RONDA TAYLOR
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT — Whether there's snow or sunshine, senior citizens from Minidoka County will watch Gov. John Evans and Rupert Mayor Bill Whittom break ground at the site of their new Senior Center on Saturday.

"We'll be there to watch the governor turn the first shovel of snow or the first shovel of dirt," Julia Sampe, senior site manager, said Wednesday. The ceremony will begin at 3 p.m.

"This is the most exciting thing that has happened to our group," Sampe added.

The single story, 4,800-square foot building will be partially funded through money the city of Rupert received from a $100,000 Federal Housing and Urban Development grant. The seniors group is contributing $100,000, which they have collected from fund-raisers held during the last seven years, to pay for the basic construction costs. The group hopes future donations will pay for furnishings and other items.

The project was coordinated by J-U-B Engineers of Twin Falls and designed by Russ Lively of Armstrong and Company, Inc., of Twin Falls.

Sealed bids for the project will be opened Nov. 21, and the seniors expect to have it finished by Aug. 1, 1986.

"The center was officially chartered in 1972," explained Ruth Johnson, seniors chairman. "A group of us had been meeting informally for a period of time before that, and we gradually worked into the charter."

The group has been meeting at the American Legion Building in Rupert, but the older, two-story building has had some disadvantages for the seniors because of the stairs and possible fire hazards.

Members also do not have a kitchen at their current facility, so meals for the group are brought in through the Meals-on-Wheels program from the kitchen at the St. Nicholas Catholic Church in Rupert.

Although the cooperation from St. Nicholas is "wonderful," Johnson said, members are pleased the new center will have its own kitchen. The Meals-on-Wheels program will continue to operate, but the meals will be cooked at the new center.

There are now 100 meals a day prepared for elderly residents to eat either at home or at the center.

Johnson would like to see both chman said the Idaho School Board Association conference held recently in Sun Valley was "outstanding." She said group discussions included youth motivation and how high technology affects schools.

She said clinics also were offered on negotiations, home school studies, finances, career ladder and alcohol and drug abuse.

Trustee Alvin Chojnacky also attended the conference and was elected President of Region 4, which consists of 22 school districts. He reported issues to be discussed during a meeting with area legislators on Nov. 26.

Topics are the 2% percent holdback in state government, supplemental levies and overall quality education. He stressed it will be a "give and take session," and urged each district to be represented at the meeting.

Churchman praised Cathie Hopper, drama and debate teacher at Jerome High School, for the clinic on listening which she presented at the conference. Churchman said it was an outstanding presentation, highly motivating and very well received.

• Kugler reported the district's enrollment "seemed to be holding a little better" this year as compared to one year ago. He said the district is retaining more high school students than last year at this time.

There is a lower drop-out rate and fewer people are moving from the community, he said.

• Since the selection of the district's lunch program as one of the outstanding programs in the state, Kugler reported that requests have come in from as far away as New York asking for information about how the district makes its lunch program work.

• Parent/teacher conferences are scheduled today and Friday in the elementary schools, and classes will not be in session Friday is set for parent/teacher conferences at the high school on an as-needed basis. Teachers will be available in all buildings this evening for parents who cannot attend conferences during the day.

• Jane Hougland, district social worker, reported on the progress being made on the Suicide Awareness and Prevention Program. She said that the Jerome area is not exempt from this national problem, with three serious suicide attempts in the last month and numerous students talking about it.

There will be a training session on Nov. 21 for all teachers in the district on suicide awareness. Hougland said she thought the district had so far handled the situation quite well, but stressed that the district needs to stay "on top" of the matter.

• Following its open session, the board met in executive session to discuss the building site for the proposed elementary school.

the number of meals cooked and the group's membership increase.

There are now 250 active members, but with about 2,500 to 3,000 people over age 60 in the community, Johnson says the group would like to double their membership rolls. She hopes the new center increases community participation.

Johnson and the late Gerald Masterson got the idea of applying for the HUD grant to build the center last January. They had both read an article in the Times-News about a similar grant application by the Twin Falls Seniors Center.

The Rupert-based seniors hurried to meet the March 29 deadline and successfully completed and submitted the application. Masterson died in March just before the process was complete.

J-U-B Engineers, Rupert City employee Eric Peterson and Whittom all deserve recognition for their help with the grant, Johnson said.

Whittom deserves "very special recognition," Johnson says. "Without him I don't know whether we'd have gotten that grant or not." The mayor hand delivered the grant application to the Idaho Division of Economic and Community Affairs to meet the deadline.

"There was $300,000 available in the state-administered fund, and one third of that money is going to the seniors here," Whittom said.

He said the new center will be "nothing but a benefit" for people in the community. The 11th Street Park site will bring people in from all over Minidoka County because of its central location, he said.

The seniors have raised much of their share of the construction funds by selling hobby and craft items from a room in the center, Sample said.

Money collected by the group has been placed in bank accounts, and special attention to high interest accounts helped the money to grow, she said.

Since $200,000 will not cover the complete cost of the new building, donations are being solicited from the community. Kitchen supplies needed are tables, chairs, a walk-in freezer and refrigerator, and pots and pans.

Cash donations will also help complete the woodworking section of the building and an awning over the front door and driveway. All donations are tax deductible, Sample said.

Center activities, including bingo, crafts, potlucks and cards, currently are held five days a week, with meals served Monday through Thursday.

In the new center, the group will be able to expand its activities. The new building was designed with more hobby and craft areas, including the special woodworking facilities which members hope will allow more men to participate.

Ample parking, easy access for the handicapped and above ground sprinklers will be additional features of the new center.

Bonds

at its meeting earlier this month, and other Gooding County cities are studying the proposal.

Thackeray said the county-wide program benefits all the cities as well as the unincorporated area.

While the city governments will not have to do anything to set up the board, Thackeray said the commission would like each town to participate and to help with the selection of board members.

A nine-member board with representatives from throughout the county is being planned, he said.

Ironically, the new investment bonds will not help an effort to bring a privately-operated corrections facility to the abandoned Gooding tuberculosis hospital.

Correction facilities are not identified by Idaho law as acceptable projects for the bond funding source, he said.

Gooding city officials are hoping the bonds will help attract companies to a planned industrial park in the northeast section of town.

In other business at its meeting Tuesday, the commission heard a report about the county's new road numbering and addressing system.

Gerald Martens, consulting engineer showed the grid maps and explained the addressing process is continuing.

The system is based on a beginning point at the northwest corner of the county boundary and uses the established township and range survey in one mile increments for numbering.

Under this system a road located at range 14 east, for example, is numbered 1400 East, with homes and businesses assigned corresponding address numbers.

The road numbering and address project has been promoted by Mountain Bell, with trial projects started in Blaine and Lincoln counties three years ago.

The utility companies have pushed for the address scheme as a way to give better service to their customers.

Mountain Bell, Intermountain Gas and Idaho Power companies are helping with the cost of the project in Gooding, as they have in other counties.

Law enforcement, the postal service and emergency services like fire and ambulance will also benefit from the rural addresses, backers of the plan say.

Hansen approves new gas pact

Franchise extended to 2026

By KRISTIN TUCKER
Times-News correspondent

HANSEN — City officials granted a 40-year franchise to Intermountain Gas Company at the Hansen City Council meeting Monday, extending the current, 30-year-old franchise through April 2026.

Now operating in Hansen under a contract opened April 2, 1956, the new contract is among 64 Intermountain Gas Company franchises in Idaho. Division manager Ralph Hass told the council that about half of those contracts are to be renewed this year.

Twin Falls, Kimberly, Wendell and other Magic Valley municipalities have recently approved similar franchises with Intermountain Gas, said Hass.

The franchise stipulates that Intermountain Gas must carry insurance for no less than $500,000 bodily injury per person, totaling not less than $1 million per occurrence.

The city also has the right to request plans, accounts, and books from the company, plus evidence of insurance, safety regulations, and the right to salvage.

Intermountain Gas is responsible for opening or closing trenches. Most of their work is done by boring, which is less expensive and requires less repair, said Hass.

Stating that the company must provide the city with a complete set of maps on request, Hass told city officials that Intermountain Gas prefers to locate gas lines on site due to frequent changes. This service will be provided free of charge.

"As far as I know, we have always had a good working relationship with Intermountain Gas," Mayor Tom Butler said.

He commended Hass and Dan McAllister of Intermountain Gas for preparing and presenting the initial proposal to the city.

"McAllister helped us avoid future problems," he said. "This (proposal) is workable from both sides."

In other business:

• Terry Cummins of Rangen, Inc., Buhl, asked the council about purchasing three to five acres of city-owned land adjacent to the sewer station.

Cummins said Rangen is interested in building a bean-receiving station in the area. The station would include a building with round tanks which would hold approximately 80,000 sacks, plus flat storage, a small office space, and a 70-foot scale.

The facility would require water and sewer hook-ups for domestic use only, said Cummins. There would be no milling at the site, so there would be no dust or pollution, he said.

Cummins said Rangen has looked at other available sites, but that the Hansen location is "a choice spot as far as our concerns." The proposed structure would be used for putting out seed in the spring and receiving the commodity back every fall.

"Rangen won't lease unless they have a sure option to buy," said Cummins. "They prefer to own the property. But you won't be displeased with the looks. It would be an asset to Hansen."

Cummins said the building project is scheduled for the "near future."

"We would like to receive commodity for 1986," he said.

The council plans to schedule a special work session to study the request in detail.

• The Hansen Volunteer Fire Department will be checking city fire alarms at noon on Nov. 23, according to Hansen Fire Chief Sam Delucia.

Responding to complaints that the fire alarm is hard to hear in some parts of town, fire department members will be stationed around town to listen for the whistle.

Delucia also encouraged the council to approve the Uniform Fire Code, which, if approved, would specify fire safety measures for businesses and individuals making improvements on their property.

"The code doesn't give the fire department the authority to pound on doors to check on things," Delucia explained. "The book at least gives you something to fall back on."

"Now, if I see a total violation, like someone smoking a cigarette while unloading a grain truck, . . . he can tell me to get off the property," said Delucia.

If the city adopts the Uniform Fire Code, Delucia and some of the other fire department members would be required to attend training sessions and be certified as fire inspectors.

"It's sort of a Catch-22," said Delucia. "We can't be certified until the city approves the Uniform Fire Code."

City Attorney William Hollifield said the fire code is "along the same line" as the Uniform Building Code.

"A lot of cities have adopted it," Hollifield said. "The only problem would be increased regulation that would have to be enforced."

Delucia said several parts of the code would not apply to the city of Hansen.

"But if we want the city to grow, we need to adopt the book now," Delucia said.

Butler recommended the council adopt the code.

"This would help us relieve a problem without a whole lot of red tape," he said. "From what I have seen, it would not present a problem."

The council plans to vote on the code at its meeting Dec. 9. A copy of the Uniform Fire Code is available at City Hall.

• Frances Harris reported that last month's library survey was unsuccessful.

Library supporters had hoped the survey would provide information on whether city residents think the Hansen Library should be closed, and if they are willing to pay $10 to $20 per year to support a library district. Surveys were to be distributed by Boy Scouts.

However, Harris said she had heard that some surveys had been taken to rural homes and others distributed in town. Only one of the approximately 20 Hansen residents present at Monday night's meeting had received the survey.

The 10-year old Hansen Library is facing financial struggles that are partially due to a recent council decision to cut the library funding in half. The library also receives $1,600 in revenue sharing plus a $200 monthly donation.

Harris reported that Janice Nelson has resigned from the 51 votes, not 59 as reported earlier, Library Board. Following Harris's recommendations, the council elected Mary Edgar to the vacant position.

• In publicly certifying results of the Nov. 5 city election, the council noted that Karen Valleau received Valleau was defeated by write-in council candidate Galen Stimpson, former mayor of Hansen, in the race for one of two city council seats.

Evans stresses recreation use in Challis N.F.

BOISE (AP) — Gov. John Evans is urging the U.S. Forest Service to consider public uses, including recreation and wildlife, over commodity production, in a long-range plan for management of central Idaho's Challis National Forest.

The governor Tuesday released his comments on the Forest Service's draft management plan. "I am asking the Challis National Forest to acknowledge its primary importance as a recreation resource and plan accordingly," Evans said.

He called for expansion of proposed wilderness in the White Clouds-Boulder Mountains; designation of wilderness in the Pioneer Mountains and Borah Peak and setting aside four new semi-primitive recreation areas.

Evans also recommended better identification of timber lands suitable for harvest and those unsuitable for lumber production, and improved watershed protection and water quality planning.

The governor said forest planners should expect more recreation use in the Challis National Forest in the near future. Eastern Idaho's population is growing, he said, and the Salmon River fish runs are recovering.

The Forest Service should set aside money for additional hunting and fishing, campsite development and new interpretive programs, the governor said.

Evans asked that at least 40,000 acres of wilderness should be included in the proposed White Clouds wilderness area. That's 34,000 more acres than recommended by the Forest Service.

In earlier comments on another plan, the one for the Sawtooth National Forest, Evans supported 202,050 acres of wilderness on the Sawtooth Forest side of the White Clouds-Boulder mountains.

Road reports set to begin

BOISE — The state's 34th annual winter road report service will begin Sunday, Nov. 17.

During the winter months, transportation offices compile highway conditions based on information from maintenance personnel. Each office records its own report for area travelers.

Road condition reports are available 24 hours a day at Shoshone (886-2266), Boise (376-8808, Coeur d'Alene (667-3521, Lewiston (746-3065, Pocatello (233-6724, and Rigby (745-7278. Information on conditions statewide are reported at 336-6600.

Reports are updated at 5:30 p.m., 9 a.m., and 3 p.m. on weekdays and 5:30 a.m. and 3 a.m. on weekends and holidays.

The road reports are limited to information on the 5,000-mile state highway system.

Busy agenda at city center

CASTLEFORD — Castleford residents are making use of their new community center. The recently remodeled grange hall is owned by the city.

City Clerk Patsy Kinyon reported to City Council members Tuesday that dance lessons are being held at the center on Wednesdays and the Castleford Pinochle Club will meet there the first and third Saturdays of each month, November through March.

The Castleford FHA girls will have a pancake breadfast at the center on Nov. 17 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Admission will be $3 for adults and $1.50 for children's half plates.

In other business:

• Jim Knutz told the council about needed repairs to the lights at the community center. Kinyon informed them that signup for the Heat Assistance program will be Nov. 18 at the community center.

Kinyon also told councilmembers that Jack's Food Market in Castleford will donate the Christmas tree to the city this year.

Hansen rec in black ink

By KRISTIN TUCKER
Times-News correspondent

HANSEN — The city Recreation Department is in the black again this year, and the City Council is thanking Hansen Recreation Director Bob Waymant for it.

Presented at Monday's City Council meeting, the department's financial statement shows a $6,507.67 income that includes proceeds from activities fees, $1,700 in cook shack income and $805 from tournament entry fees.

An additional $300 was earned from a pancake supper and another $777 came from the Richfield Rodeo.

Recreation Department expenses from Aug. 13, 1984 to Sept. 13, 1985 totaled $6,406.20, leaving a balance at $101.38.

Councilmembers commended Waymant for the time and effort he contributed to the job.

The council changed the organization of the city Recreation Department last spring. Waymant was appointed city recreation director, with city clerk Darlene Miller as secretary-treasurer.

The council also approved expenditures for a scorekeeper's box, and repairs were made to the cook shack and restrooms, bringing them up to health code requirements.

Hagerman School Board reviews course plan

By APRIL BISHOP POHL
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — The Hagerman School Board reviewed on Monday the new Northwest accreditation recommendation which calls for additional math and science courses as well as computer science, foreign languages and performing arts.

The new program would leave students with 3½ electives in four years of school, according to School Superintendent Kenneth Black. If the state changed to seven classes per day, students would then have 10 electives in four years, he said.

Schools seek to be members of the Northwest accreditation program so graduates may attend the college of their choice nationwide, Black said.

If schools are only state accredited and not Northwest accredited, the graduates may only attend in-state public colleges, he said.

Trading lags as traders pick up their profits

By CHET CURRIER
The Associated Press

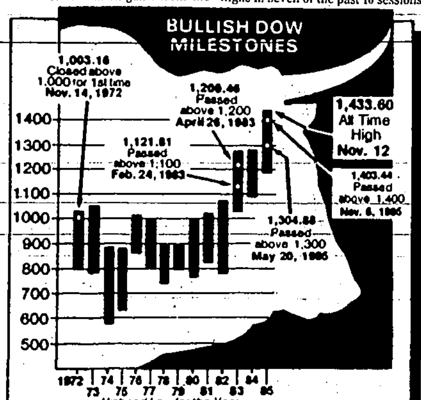
NEW YORK — Stock prices posted some modest losses Wednesday as traders cashed in on gains from the market's recent rise to record highs.

Trading slowed from its recent active pace.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had closed at record highs in seven of the past 10 sessions, dropped back 5.85 points to 1,427.75.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to 109.69 million shares, against 170.80 million Tuesday.

Brokers said there was nothing special in the news to cause any abrupt change of mood among investors.



They noted that the market had travelled a long way in a short time, leading some participants to conclude that the rally was due for at least a brief respite. From Oct. 25 through Tuesday's close, the Dow Jones industrials climbed more than 77 points.

In the early stages of the advance, buying was concentrated in big-name stocks like the Dow's 30 components. In recent sessions, however, it broadened out to include many secondary issues.

Wednesday's session opened with a round of selling. At midafternoon, the Dow climbed briefly to the plus side, then retreated again before steadying at the close.

In the economic news, the Federal Reserve reported that consumer credit outstanding grew at a 24.9 percent annual rate in September.

There has been some concern on Wall Street that consumers, who have been borrowing heavily and saving little in recent months, might soon run out of spending power, with a resultant slowdown of the economy.

However, a good part of the credit growth for September was ascribed to auto manufacturers' below-market financing promotions, most of which have since ended.

Car sales, exceptionally strong during the promotional period, have lately weakened as expected. Among the auto stocks Wednesday, Ford Motor rose ⅞ to 49; General Motors gained ⅝ to 69; Chrysler was unchanged at 42¼, and American Motors dropped ⅛ to 2¼.

F.W. Woolworth rose ⅞ to 55¾. The company reported third-quarter earnings of $1.20 a share, up from 82 cents in the comparable period a year ago.

Russ Berrie & Co., which also came in with higher quarterly profits, added 1½ to 21⅜.

H.H. Robertson fell 1½ to 20⅝. Late Tuesday the company said it would omit its quarterly dividend.

In the daily tally on the Big Board, about nine issues declined in price for every five that gained ground. The exchange's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .54 to 113.79.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 133.10 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials lost .98 to 218.65, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down .98 at 197.10.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market dropped .56 to 303.85. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 235.87, down .54.

South Africa halts Krugerrand output

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa temporarily stopped minting Krugerrand because of a U.S. ban on importing the gold coin that has been targeted by anti-apartheid activists, government television reported Wednesday night.

However, there were no indications South Africa intended to halt sales or exports of the internationally marketed coin that last year accounted for about 10 percent of the country's gold earnings. Bullion accounts for about half of foreign income in South Africa, where a white government rules the nation's 5 million whites and 24 million blacks.

Importation of the Krugerrand was one of the sanctions announced against South Africa by President Reagan in September. The U.S. market for Krugerrands accounted for about 80 percent of world demand for the coin, according to the Chamber of Mines.

The decision to temporarily suspect minting was not believed by analysts to affect the price or availability.

A statement from the South African Broadcasting Corp. (SABC) news monitor, which routinely relays SABC news items by telex, said:

"Production of Krugerrands has come to a temporary halt in response to the ban on imports, particularly by the United States. A spokesman for the South African mint said on present demand production would nevertheless have been down to a quarter of normal output."

No spokesmen for the government-owned mint could be reached for comment Wednesday night, but it appeared likely South Africa would draw on its reserves of the coin until demand picks up.

The Krugerrand, marketed by the alliance of privately owned mines called the Chamber of Mines, has limited collector's value beyond what it can demand as a a troy ounce gold coin.

Committee approves limits on holding checks

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House panel gave overwhelming approval Wednesday to a bill that would limit the time a bank can hold a deposited check before making the money available to its customer.

"I hope everyone will keep in mind that we are talking about money that belongs to the customers of financial institutions," said Rep. Fernand J. St Germain, D-Rhode Island. "This money does not belong to the banks."

St Germain said arbitrary check holds "that go days and weeks beyond the actual collection time are bonanzas for the financial institutions — big money makers for the banks and often big hardships for consumers who need the money now."

St Germain is chairman of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee and also the financial institutions supervision subcommittee that voted 24-5 approval for the St Germain bill Wednesday.

The measure now goes to the full committee, where approval is likely, then on to the House, where it faces a less certain future.

It would require the Federal Reserve system to develop a system within three years under which most deposited checks from the same geographic area would be available for withdrawal the following business day and that other checks would be available in no more than three days.

In the interim, local checks could be held up to three days during the first year after the legislation became effective.

How to switch that taxable income into tax-free category

Sylvia Porter

Third in a series

Say you are a taxpayer with a paper loss in municipal bonds. You may want to consider a bond swap — swapping your bonds for other municipal bonds. Handled properly, the swap can give you a tax loss and more tax-free interest than you are now getting. And you don't put up a penny.

For instance, John Green bought an Apple City bond 10 years ago for $10,000. The bond's coupon rate is 6 percent with a maturity date of 2008. The bond's current value is only $7,000. Green exchanges the Apple bond for a Peach City bond with the same face value, maturing in 2029 and paying 6 1/2 percent interest. The Peach City bond's value is also $7,000.

Result: Green has a $3,000 loss for 1985 that can shelter $3,000 of investment profits. What's more, Green has improved his investment position by increasing his tax-free interest income from $600 to $650.

Important: For Green to get a currently deductible loss, the new bonds must not be "substantially identical" to the bonds sold. They are not "substantially identical" if swapped bonds are issued by a different state or local government. But there is no clear-cut answer. One brokerage firm suggests that bonds of the same city should differ at least ½ percent in the yield to maturity and five years in maturity dates.

Mutual fund switching: Let's say John Green's investment in Growth Fund shows a loss. If Growth is part of a single management group of mutual funds, Green can switch from one fund to another.

Tax-saving move: Green switches out of Growth into another fund within the same group of funds. Result: Green gets a loss deduction without leaving the mutual fund family. Then, if Green wants, he can wait 31 days (because of the wash sale rule) and switch back to Growth Fund.

If you, an investor, want to realize gains to sop up an established loss, you can sell bonds or mutual fund shares at a profit and immediately re-establish your position in the identical investment. Result: The gain is recognized for tax purposes. It is not necessary for you to avoid buying substantially identical securities.

As an investor in stocks and bonds, you've had both successes and failures in 1985. Some of you have cashed in and pocketed profits, both short- and long-term capital gain — but you still hold paper losses. Others of you may have realized losses and still hold paper gains.

In addition to investment strategies, there also are tax strategies to consider. Eli J. Warach, a divisional senior vice president of Prentice-Hall, worked with me in highlighting tax strategies to help you. Most taxpayers with gains take down losses to shelter gains; other taxpayers make the most of realized losses by taking down gains. Either way, taxable profits are turned into tax-free profits.

This usual tax strategy assumes your tax and investment goals coincide. But suppose they don't. Suppose you don't want to sell to create a tax loss or a tax-free gain because you think your investment still has profit potential.

In the best of both worlds, you can use one of several techniques to sell for tax purposes but still maintain your investment position. You can get your year-end tax shelter without giving up the chance for future profits.

Assume John Green has made several profitable stock sales during 1985 but Green also has a paper loss on 100 shares of XYZ stock. Green thinks XYZ has turned the corner and does not want to let it go. Green's year-end move is to "double up" his XYZ position. He buys another 100 shares of XYZ, waits 31 days and then sells the original 100 shares. Result: Green gets the loss deduction without missing any rise in XYZ.

Or assume Dick Able has already taken a loss on XYZ stock and has a paper profit on 100 shares of ABC stock. Able doesn't want to sell ABC because he thinks ABC will go much higher.

Able can sell his ABC stock and offset his gain with his loss from the XYZ stock and then immediately repurchase 100 shares of ABC.

Key point: The "wash sale" rule does not apply to investment gains. Gain is recognized regardless of whether the investor buys substantially identical property within 30 days before or after the sale. Ask your broker or accountant for definitions of technical words in this column that you do not fully understand.

Industrial injuries up during '84

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of work-related injuries and illnesses in private industry rose 11.7 percent last year, the Labor Department reported Wednesday, a significant increase regarded with alarm by some experts on occupational safety.

Labor Secretary William Brock said he is "deeply concerned and disturbed" by the report and promised that the department will "re-examine, re-evaluate and re-double our efforts to assure we are doing everything possible to make the American workplace as safe as it can be."

Eight incidents of injury or illness were reported for every 100 full-time workers last year, compared with 7.6 in 1983. It is the largest single-year increase in the history of OSHA dating to 1973, said the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics. Injury and illness rates were up in every sector of the economy except finance, which showed a negligible decliae. It traditionally has the lowest rate.

The number of injuries and illnesses overall went up to 5.4 million in 1984, a jump of half a million from the previous year. Some of the increase was expected because total employment rose by more than 4 million people last year, but the rising levels of injuries and illnesses far outpaced a 6.6 percent increase in hours of exposure due to more hiring by employers.

The increases followed four straight years of marked improvement in injury and illness rates and the latest figures brought into question several new policies of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the key Labor Department agency which monitors workplace safety.

"There's nothing in the data to show any of their programs are working," said Margaret Seminario, a health and safety specialist with the AFL-CIO.

Early in the Reagan administration, OSHA embarked on a cooperative approach between management and government inspectors on health and safety regulation. OSHA also has adopted a targeted inspection program putting many of its limited resources into monitoring of manufacturing and construction sites with poor safety records.

In addition, the size of the OSHA inspection force was cut by 20 percent to 25 percent early in Ronald Reagan's presidency. There now are 1,200 inspectors.

Women get ulcers at increasing rate

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — Ulcers, once thought of as a man's disease, are now almost as likely to afflict women, according to the maker of an anti-ulcer drug.

Glaxo Inc. says new figures from the National Institutes of Health show the ratio of male to female ulcer patients is now 2 to 1, compared to 20 to 1 two decades ago.

Some 20 million Americans have suffered from the disease at some time in their lives and 1.5 million new cases occur each year.

Medical researchers speculate the increase in women ulcer sufferers is due in part to new pressures and stresses trigged by their entry into the work force, which may cause career-family conflicts.

Parents must pay for kids' babies

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Wisconsin has adopted a pioneering law that holds parents financially responsible if their minor children have babies.

Under the measure, signed Tuesday by Gov. Anthony Earl, a welfare agency could take the parents of both the mother and father to court to make them pay for the expenses of raising the child.

The law also allocates $1 million for pregnancy counseling, requires a girl's consent before a hospital or clinic can notify her parents of her abortion, and repeals restrictions on the advertising and sale of contraceptives.

State Rep. Marlin Schneider, who said no other state has such a law, said it was intended to reduce teen-age pregnancies by increasing discussion between parents and teen-agers regarding sex.

By making parents financially responsible, "they may at least talk about the subject" before there is an unwanted pregnancy, he said.

The legislator predicted the law could help promote understanding on abortion, but Barbara Lyons, an anti-abortion lobbyist for Wisconsin Citizens Concerned for Life, said it would only encourage teen-agers to have abortions.

"Essentially, abortion is the easiest option in the short term," she said. "If the situation is going to be complicated by the boy's parents going to court to decide what the support payments should be, the girls won't tell their parents."

Critics also questioned whether the law was workable.

"How are you going to make the mother's parents responsible?" asked June Perry, executive director of New Concepts, a human service agency in Milwuakee. "Where are the mother's parents going to get the money?"

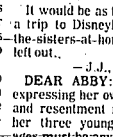
"The Legislature passed the bill, but with no thought or effort put into how it's going to be implemented," she said.

Earl said the new law seeks to underscore that "all of us, parents and young people, have a responsibility for our acts."

It also is "a sincere effort to limit the thousands of tragedies that are annually played out" in Wisconsin because of unwanted teen pregnancies, the governor said.

Wisconsin, with a population of about 4.6 million, recorded 2,403 births to girls under 18 in 1984, according to Barbara Barnard, adolescent pregnancy prevention specialist in the state Division of Health.

Readers offer ideas on story of sibling rivalry



Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR READERS: First this appeared in my column:

"DEAR ABBY: I am the mother of four lovely daughters. The eldest is 11. I'll call her Agnes. When Agnes was 3, her father died. Two years later, I remarried. Every summer, the parents of my first husband take Agnes for a month. Their son was their only child, and Agnes is their only grandchild. So far, Agnes has been to Disneyland, Hawaii, Mexico and Europe.

My husband and I cannot afford to take our other three children on trips like that, and they are understandably envious and resentful. I'm sure with all the divorces, deaths and remarriages, this is a common problem. If you or any of your readers have a solution, I'd appreciate knowing it.

— TORN

"DEAR TORN: What are your alternatives? To deny Agnes those exotic trips with her grandparents in order to avoid being envied by her half-sisters? Not fair to Agnes.

To ask the grandparents to take one of the half-sisters along every year in the interest of family unity? Rather presumptuous. It would be very generous if they were to offer, but that idea would have to originate with them. Readers?"

Did I get letters!

DEAR ABBY: Your answer to "Torn" was appalling! How can you be so insensitive to the feelings of the younger siblings? Look ahead: Agnes will grow up to be a snob, thinking she is better than her sisters, who will surely grow to hate her. It's just human nature.

"Torn" should not permit those grandparents to take Agnes anywhere unless the sisters are included. Admit you were wrong. Abby.

— LOS ANGELES

DEAR ABBY: The solution to "Torn's" problem is so simple, I'm surprised you didn't see it. While Agnes is off with her grandparents, the parents should treat the other girls to picnics, visits to the children's museum, the amusement park, the zoo, an overnight camping trip or a fun weekend staying at a motel.

It would be as thrilling for them as a trip to Disneyland. And that way the sisters-at-home wouldn't feel so left out.

— J.J., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

DEAR ABBY: "Torn" could be expressing her own feelings of anger and resentment rather than that of her three younger children. Their ages must be anywhere from infancy to 6 years old — too young to have formed their own feelings of envy and resentment.

Instead of harboring such feelings, "Torn" should rejoice in the knowledge that her 11-year-old has loving grandparents who can afford to take their only grandchild on exotic trips.

— MICHIGAN SOCIAL WORKER

DEAR ABBY: "Torn" should use this opportunity to teach her children two valuable lessons: (1) Learn to accept the things you cannot change. (2) Life is not always fair. The earlier they learn these lessons, the stronger they will be. I think we parents try too hard to protect our children from "humps" and bruises, so their childhood will be as painless and smooth as possible. This is doing them no favors. They need to be equipped to live in the "real" world where they will be dealt more serious bumps.

— MARY IN CORBIN, KY.

DEAR ABBY: "Torn" seems to expect that Agnes' grandparents treat her (Torn's) three younger children like they treat Agnes. May I ask "Torn" how she treats her former in-laws? Does she take all her children to visit them, and refer to them as "Grandma and Grandpa Jones"?

Are Mother's and Father's Day cards signed by all the children and sent to them? Are the girls encouraged to make presents for them on birthdays and St. Valentine's Day? Does "Torn" invite them for family dinners on Thanksgiving and Christmas — or any other time?

To put it bluntly, does "Torn" and her three younger daughters treat these people as well as she treats her new in-laws?

There are exceptions, of course, but I think the grandparents will treat the "new" kids equally if the kids and their mom will make the first move. The ball is in "Torn's" court. Feel free to use my name.

— LAURA B. IN MAPLE VALLEY

DEAR ABBY: You'd better tell "Corney Venhemann" that Dizzy Dean must have been listening to radio when he "originated" that line, "Lot's of people who don't say ain't, ain't working."

Will Rogers said it first.

But, on the other hand, it was a laid-back zany football player named Joe Don Looney who first said: "I never met a man I didn't like — except Will Rogers."

Job-family conflict causes depression

BOSTON (AP) — Nearly half the employees interviewed in a study say the main reason they get depressed at work is the strain of holding a job and raising a family at the same time.

The Boston University study, released Wednesday and considered the first of its kind in the country, also found that one-third of working parents spend part of the day worrying a great deal about their kids.

"The world isn't set up to have two parents at work," said Bradley Googins, an assistant professor of community organization, management and planning at Boston University's School of Social Work. "It is a struggle. From our data, it's something that does impact most families."

The researchers also concluded that individual employees have done everything they can to improve the strain of holding a job and raising a family, and said it was now up to corporations to help solve the problem.

Googins and Dianne Burden, an assistant professor of social policy and research, followed the lives 651 employees at all levels of a large Boston-based corporation for one year, interviewing them about work and family matters.

The researchers would not identify the corporation but said it was typical of many American firms — only 20 percent of the workforce had a traditional family set-up, with a working husband and unemployed wife caring for children at home.

Googins said similar studies have been conducted with government employees, but none has lasted as long as a year and examined private-sector workers.

The Boston University study found that working mothers, especially if they are married, bear the brunt of juggling career and family.

The average female married parent at the company, according to Googins and Burden, spent 85 hours a week on her job, homemaking and child care, compared to the 75 hours spent by a single female parent, 66 by a married male parent, 65 by a single male parent and 55 by a non-parent.

"Married mothers are the ones who have moved into new roles at home and at work," said Googins. "Culturally, they still hang onto their roles at home while they love what they do at work. It manifests itself in conflict."

The Boston University study also found that:

• Forty-three percent of the employees interviewed, both male and female, said the strain of managing family responsibilities was the main reason they got depressed at work, Googins said. family.

One-third of the respondents said they worried a significant amount about their kids during the day, "which has got to be a large part of this stress-strain depression."

• Eighty-eight percent of the employees rated their job performance as "very high," while only 56 percent rated their performance as a parent in the same way. The researchers said their finding indicates working parents feel alone in their struggle to manage career and family.

"They feel frustrated they can't see the kid in a play at night or that the house is a mess," said Googins. "Perhaps if they saw that others were going through the same thing they would feel more satisfied with their performance as parents."

• Few employees used formal after-school day care for their children.

Children's issues conference slated

RUPERT — The first annual "Concerns for Children" conference is scheduled Saturday at Minico High School with a day-long program.

Steve Hale, Rupert, is arranging the conference with the Odyssey Institute Corp. of Connecticut, with which he is now affiliated.

Miss Idaho will attend, and the presenters will include a variety of professionals.

Cost is $10 per person or $15 a couple. Pre-registration can be made by calling the Rupert Chamber of Commerce, 436-4793 between 2 and 4 p.m. daily.

The Summit

Reagan, Gorbachev have huge gap to span

By THOMAS KENT
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — To many Americans, the Soviet Union seems a gray, uniform society, a world of secrecy and coercion. Soviet consumer goods are often shoddy, and exit from the country is strictly controlled.

Soviets, on the other hand, express shock at what they see as the failures of America's well-educated, wealthy society: jobs are not guaranteed, crime is widespread, medical care and university education cost money, and homeless people roam the streets.

Which country is "better"? How is Soviet society different from the world that Americans know?

The questions arise as President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev prepare to sit down Nov. 19-20 for the first summit between the superpowers in more than five years.

Coming from societies so different, Reagan and Gorbachev have a tremendous gap to bridge. The success of the Geneva talks could depend on the degree to which the two leaders realize their differences and seek common ground for accord.

Most Soviets readily admit that their standard of living is far below American norms, although the multi-family apartment is disappearing and Gorbachev's administration has pledged a new commitment to consumer goods. Many Soviets envy the freedom of Americans to travel, and look to the West for new ideas in style and technology.

One major difference between Soviet and American life is the amount of organization in Soviet society.

The U.S. government asks little of citizens, except that they obey the law. Soviet citizens, on the other hand, are expected not only to obey the law, but to participate actively in communist society.

A Soviet citizen who doesn't vote in his country's single-candidate elections is likely to find a committee of neighborhood volunteers at his apartment door looking for an explanation. He isn't likely to be penalized, but absence from the polling station is noticed.

It is not illegal to refuse to work on special days of unpaid labor held each year in honor of V.I. Lenin, the founder of the Soviet state. But many office and factory workers find it easier to show up for work than to stand out among their colleagues as selfish or unenthusiastic.

Soviets often are urged to subscribe to government publications, do volunteer work in auxiliary police units, schools or on farms and attend public lectures. Many do, because it is the path of least resistance in a world that encourages public service.

The society also moves quickly to deal with citizens who get out of line. The theory that "they're not hurting anyone but themselves" rarely applies.

A drunk found wandering on a Moscow street will be taken to a "detoxification station," sobered up and then turned over to the custody of supervisory committees at his residence or place of work.

Workers who get into a fight at their factory may be fined by an informal "comrades' court" and assigned "buddies" to make sure they behave properly in the future. People who don't work at all can be imprisoned for "parasitism."

Spreading "anti-Soviet propaganda" is punishable by law. But for people eager to serve society or who are "joiners" by nature, the Soviet Union's organized society can be a benefit.

U.S. and Soviet society also differ in the freedom of choice available to citizens and how the fruits of society are parceled out.

In the United States, money is perhaps the most important factor. Americans who have the money can live where they want, vacation anywhere, see almost any theater performance.

The Soviet Union, for economic and political reasons, has designed its society much differently.

To deal with limited vacation facilities, for instance, the Soviet Union has a fixed number of all-inclusive packages for distribution to citizens. The packages are cheap, but it is difficult to modify them or to vacation without them. Individuals can have trouble booking transportation and hotels, even if they have plenty of rubles.

Therefore, getting the right package — through hard work or special contacts — becomes more important than money itself.

Similarly, moving from one city to another isn't just a question of money. Apartments are cheap, but to prevent overcrowding, the state decides who can move into popular cities like Moscow and Leningrad. Criteria other than money determine whether a pass to live in a sought-after city will be approved.

Politically, the trappings of democracy are everywhere in the Soviet Union. There are regular elections, voter meetings with candidates and an extensive hierarchy of local, regional and national councils and parliaments. But the system bears little similarity to Western democracy.

While a one-candidate election seems a mockery to Westerners, there has rarely been anything else in the Soviet Union. Soviet officials note that if citizens are dissatisfied enough with the single candidate, they can defeat him and force a new election. This occasionally happens.

The nation's paramount leaders, the members of the Communist Party's ruling Politburo, do not derive their power from public elections at all. Politburo members, including Gorbachev, are elected by the party's own Central Committee.

They may be members of public parliaments as well, but their real power comes from party elections to the Politburo.

Soviet spokesmen often assert that there is no true democracy in the United States. They note that socialists and communists do not become major U.S. political candidates, and they say the Republican and Democratic parties simply offer different flavors of capitalism.

The United States is a young country, rich in resources, that has known for most of its existence only prosperity, orderly changes of government and victory in foreign wars. Most Americans are relatively confident of their political and economic system, and are convinced that their leaders would never intentionally start a war.

The Soviet people, by comparison, go back many more centuries, and their history is marked by bloody fighting on their own soil, abrupt changes of government and economic privation as well as periods of brilliance in science and the arts.

Soviets are often indignant that many Americans don't know the Soviet Union lost 20 million people in World War II. Soviet officials say that after suffering such a terrible loss, the Soviet Union could never think of launching a third world war, and that it is an obscenity for Washington to suggest that such a thing is possible.

Shultz, Weinberger and the summit are uneasy bedfellows

By NORMAN BLACK

Analysis

WASHINGTON — To George Shultz, President Reagan's summit meeting with Mikhail Gorbachev is a test of diplomacy.

To Caspar Weinberger, it is a potential trap.

Shultz, the secretary of state, has kept a relatively low profile in the months leading up to the summit, working behind the scenes to prepare and counsel the president on negotiating approaches.

Weinberger, the secretary of defense, has by contrast gone into overdrive with his rhetoric, using forum after forum to brand the Soviets as the villains of world affairs and unworthy of trust.

In a speech on Oct. 3, Weinberger flatly accused the Soviets of continuing to strive for a "first strike" nuclear capability over the United States. And on Oct. 22, he made it clear that given a choice between the "Star Wars" program and arms control negotiations, he'd take Star Wars any time.

In the middle, of course, is Reagan. Administration insiders who demand anonymity say the president is philosophically attuned to Weinberger, but respects Shultz's view that a meaningful arms control agreement might be negotiated with the Soviets.

The president has recently echoed some of Weinberger's remarks in a bid to lower public expectations about his first summit, but there is a broad, general feeling within the administration that Shultz and national security advisor Robert McFarlane have risen at Weinberger's expense.

Weinberger will not be traveling to Geneva with the president for the summit. Aides to the secretary say that doesn't trouble him in the least; other officials say it gives Shultz more of a clear field to urge flexibility. Weinberger was concerned enough about the influence of Shultz and others that he canceled a two-week trip in October to the Far East.

To some State and Defense officials interviewed over recent weeks, the differences between Weinberger and Shultz are merely a reflection of the institutional biases of the two bureaucracies they head. To others, though, theirs is a confrontation that is distracting to the president and one that leaves an impression abroad of confusion in the making of American foreign policy.

And it is a dispute that is almost impossible to document publicly. Top leaders of the two departments refuse to discuss the subject on the record and most — with an eye toward pre-summit public relations — maintain even in private there is no dispute between their bosses.

"I think in the preparation for the summit there has been considerable harmony," asserts one top civilian at the Pentagon.

"There is a good deal of consensus at this point on summit preparations," says a State Department official.

Shultz and Weinberger, however, have been in office too long and fought too many of their battles in public for their respective views on the military, arms control and the Soviet Union to be masked.

"I think stories suggesting personal animosity between these two are unfair," says one Pentagon source. "But they do approach these issues differently and they both have the ear of the president."

"There's more of a tendency at State to be simplistic; to be interested in agreements," summarizes another Pentagon official. "Weinberger sees no value in reaching an agreement unless it is really fortified with safeguards."

The history of the conflicting advice that Reagan has received from his two lieutenants is weighty. Weinberger and Shultz have disagreed on some of the most basic issues that determine foreign policy.

One of the most serious splits occurred a year ago, when Weinberger and Shultz went public with a dispute over when the United States should use military power. This year, as the approaching summit began to attract attention, Weinberger went on the attack again.

Just since June, he has argued that the United States should not continue to abide by the SALT II agreement; pushed a successful first test of an anti-satellite rocket, and endorsed a new, broader reading of the restrictions contained in the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty.

He also has revealed new details of Soviet efforts to buy or steal American technology; urged a cutback in the number of Soviet citizens allowed inside the United States; applauded Reagan's refusal to use his "Star Wars" program as a bargaining chip in arms talks, and repeatedly condemned critics who fail in his eyes to see the "moral differences" between Reagan's arms buildup and that of the Soviet Union.

He went out of his way last month to disclose the Soviets had begun deploying a new intercontinental missile the administration considers a violation of the SALT II accord, and in September drew attention to a posthumous promotion for Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson, an Army officer killed by a Soviet sentry last March inside East Germany.

Shultz, by many reports, has been annoyed by some of Weinberger's outbursts. But he has said little in public and has enjoyed success in countering Weinberger behind the scenes. Reagan heeded his counsel and decided not to abrogate the SALT II agreement. The president also decided to stick with the long-standing, more narrow interpretation of what the ABM treaty allows in the area of missile defense research.

Bostonians will soon rummage through $19 million attic

By CHRISTOPHER B. DALY
The Associated Press

BOSTON — At a cost of $19 million, Massachusetts has erected a building at the edge of Boston Harbor that will serve as the state's attic, the government's filing cabinet and a display case for some of the nation's most historic documents.

The Massachusetts Archives, Museum and State Records Center, enclosing 102,000 square feet on a 4½-acre site at Columbia Point in Boston, is to open Nov. 19 and the museum will be available to the public a week later.

The archives and records center should be fully ready by early December.

"I would say we have what will be the best archival facility in the nation — it's state of the art," Secretary of State Michael J. Connolly said in an interview last week.

For decades, the state has stored its official papers and treasures in a crowded, musty basement section of the Statehouse on Beacon Hill, a convenient spot for tourists but an inappropriate place to sort, preserve and display the state's vast holdings.

"We are presently in a dungeon in the bottom of the Statehouse," Connolly said. "For the past seven years, I have been working to bring about this rebirth."

The gleaming glass and stone building, fitted with high-technology security, climate control and fire-fighting systems, will display some of the oldest and most valuable documents and artifacts in American history.

Connolly says most visitors will want to see the original versions of the Massachusetts Constitution, the 1628 Charter of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, the diaries of Plymouth Colony Governor William Bradford, Indian treaties and the papers of such patriots as Sam Adams, John Adams and John Hancock.

The collection also includes birth and death records, lists of immigrants arriving at the Port of Boston, muster rolls from the Revolution and Civil War, and the "Eastern Lands Papers" which describe the history of Maine before it separated from Massachusetts in 1820. Soon to be deposited are the archives created by the WGBH series, "Vietnam: A Television History."

Connolly, still smarting over security issues since the 1984 theft of the 1628 Charter from the old Archives Museum in the Statehouse basement, stresses that every effort has been made to keep the new structure secure. The Charter was found this year with other stolen property, but no arrests have been made.

On the issue of security, Connally said: "We are coming of age. It will be infinitely better than at the Statehouse. And I'm going to personally wrestle with the guards to make sure they're ready."

James Igoe, deputy secretary of state in charge of public records, said the building was designed to withstand the natural elements as well as criminals. The basement level is 16 feet above the highest known tide in Boston Harbor.

"On top of that, we have a waterproof system built below the slab of the building," Igoe said. "The building is impenetrable as far as water is concerned."

Once the new building is open, no fees will be charged to visitors or researchers. Connolly said he expects the number of annual visitors to be "definitely up" from the 100,000 who now find the old archives.

Dan Fenn, director of the Kennedy Library, described the building as an "elegant" addition to the area. "We look forward to having them as neighbors," he said.

Massachusetts townsfolk discover trek of perimeter no simple stroll

HEATH, Mass. (AP) — Officials didn't know what they were in for when they decided to resurrect the colonial tradition of "perambulating the bounds," walking the town's perimeter to locate stone boundary markers and carve the date.

"I just thought it would be a nice thing to do because it was the (town) bicentennial," said Anne Steinbock, chairman of the Board of Selectmen in this town of 480 people located five miles south of the Vermont border.

Mrs. Steinbock suggested officials from Heath and two neighboring northwestern Massachusetts towns of Colrain and Charlemont begin the project after she noticed it had been 10 years since Heath last checked its boundaries.

Selectmen from the three towns began the task last Saturday, and it still isn't done.

At 9 a.m. Saturday, Mrs. Steinbock and two fellow selectmen met Colrain selectman Duane Scranton in the H.O. Cook State Forest. After walking down the Massachusetts-Vermont border, across a mowed field, through some woods, over a stream and around a swamp, they found the 4-foot granite marker on the spot where the two towns and Vermont meet.

It took about 15 minutes to find the marker, and 20 minutes to chisel "85" to mark the year.

Back at Mrs. Steinbock's house, they met selectman David McKay of Charlemont and set off to find the marker where Charlemont, to the south, and Colrain, to the east, intersects Heath, which they thought was close to Mrs. Steinbock's house.

The party drove down a road, then hiked up Pocumtuck Mountain to admire the view. Using a topographical map and a 1914 atlas, they began searching for the marker, which records described as a 4-inch by 8-inch by 1-foot stone.

After a three-hour trek up steep slopes and down deep drops, the main party found the marker. But they somehow lost the man with the chisel. They propped up the marker, and left, with Heath officials planning to return another day to chisel on this year's date.

The Charlemont-Heath-Colrain marker was actually about a 10-minute walk from the road, Mrs. Steinbock said.

"It was where it should have been," she said. "But it was a lovely afternoon to be in the woods."

Mrs. Steinbock said Heath selectmen hope to perambulate the border with Charlemont this Sunday. Because of a number of angles in the boundary, there are six markers to be found. Town officials then plan to search out markers for the boundary with the town of Rowe to the west.

Researchers say it's too early to prove virus causes MS

By MAUD S. BEELMAN
The Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Researchers who discovered traces of a virus in blood cells of some multiple sclerosis patients said Tuesday it was too early to claim they had found a cause of the debilitating disease that afflicts about 250,000 Americans.

The study of multiple sclerosis patients in Sweden and in Key West, Fla., found genetic material and antibodies of an as yet unidentified human virus in white blood cells extracted from the cerebrospinal fluid, which bathes the brain and spinal cord.

The virus is being described as related but not identical to HTLV-1, a virus that causes a rare form of human leukemia.

Before labeling it a cause of multiple sclerosis, the researchers will have to isolate the entire virus in laboratory studies and determine if it is present in the brains of sufferers, said one of the researchers, Dr. Hilary Koprowski, director of the Wistar Institute in Philadelphia.

If the virus is a cause of the disease, it may be only one of several, the researchers said.

The findings of the work by scientists at the Wistar Institute and the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md., with assistance from the University of Lund in Sweden and the University of Miami, will be published Thursday in the British scientific journal, Nature.

The disease attacks the insulation around the body's nerves and can produce paralysis, loss of speech or mental dysfunction.

The researchers studied samples of cerebrospinal fluid and blood from 52 multiple sclerosis patients, 17 patients with other neurological diseases and 104 healthy individuals.

The scientists were able to grow a type of white blood cell from the cerebrospinal fluid of eight of the multiple sclerosis sufferers and two of the people without the disease.

Of the eight multiple sclerosis sufferers, five had white blood cells with biochemical and genetic characteristics similar to white cells infected with HTLV agents, Koprowski said in a telephone interview.

Cells from the two normal people showed nothing, Koprowski said.

The researchers also found antibodies related to the HTLV family of viruses in blood and cerebrospinal fluid most of the multiple sclerosis patients.

But there was "no implication from the data" that antibodies related to HTLV could be used to diagnose the disease because only 60 percent of the patients had them at any given time, researchers said.

The Miami Herald reported Sunday that prolonged person-to-person contact could play a more critical role in transmitting multiple sclerosis than previously thought, but Stephen Reingold of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society branded that contention as "absolutely unsubstantiated and alarmist."

"It's just terrible," agreed Dr. William Sheremata, the University of Miami neurologist who worked on the virus study. "People have gotten the notion that it's catching and that certainly is not the case.

"If virus is important it (exposure) is something that happens early in life. It's the trigger rather than the cause," Sheremata said.

Aspirin warning labels stirs legislative battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Aspirin industry leaders are waging intense lobbying efforts to block legislation that would require bottle labels warning of a possible link between aspirin and the often-fatal children's illness, Reye syndrome, a congressional spokesman said Tuesday.

Industry representatives hoping to reach a compromise last week began negotiating with the sponsor of the mandatory warning bill, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio, a senior Democrat on the Labor and Human Resources Committee, an aide to the senator said Tuesday.

Also involved in the discussions are Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, the committee's chairman; the Aspirin Foundation, the trade organization for the industry leaders; and the Food and Drug Administration.

An FDA official disclaimed active participation in the talks, however, saying: "We are spectators right now."

Drew von Bergen, the Metzenbaum aide, said the industry hoped to forestall scheduled hearings this week before the Senate committee on whether federal law should require the aspirin bottle warnings on Reye syndrome.

The hearings were scheduled to begin Tuesday, but were cancelled as the talks on a possible compromise got under way, even though there was no firm word on progress.

"There are discussions going on for some sort of agreement, but the agreement has not been worked out yet," von Bergen said. "... At this stage we can't discuss what the possible agreement is because there is no agreement. But they're working towards it."

The Aspirin Foundation has been vigorously pushing a voluntary label campaign among its member companies that the FDA has said is successful. But the American Academy of Pediatrics has called the voluntary campaign a failure, and a House subcommittee voted last month to require mandatory warning labels.

Report connects artificial sweetener with epileptic seizures

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
The Associated Press

BOSTON — A new report suggests that NutraSweet might trigger epilepsy in some susceptible people and recommends that doctors question seizure victims about their consumption of the popular artificial sweetener.

In a letter in the latest issue of the British journal Lancet, Dr. Richard J. Wurtman describes three cases in which people had their first epileptic seizures after drinking large amounts of soft drinks that contained NutraSweet.

Wurtman theorizes that the sweetener — known generically as aspartame — lowers levels of chemicals in the brain that protect against seizures.

In his letter, Wurtman said the three cases "can only suggest an association between aspartame and seizures." But he added that they are "compatible with evidence that high aspartame doses may produce neurochemical changes that, in laboratory animals, are associated with depressed seizure thresholds."

Officials of G.D. Searle & Co., which makes NutraSweet, said Wurtman's findings were not scientifically controlled, and the apparent link could well have been due to chance.

"We have every confidence in its safety, and our confidence is based on the research," Dr. John Heybach, Searle's director of medical and scientific affairs, said of NutraSweet. "It's the most extensively researched food additive prior to its approval in history."

Wurtman, a physician at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has been a frequent critic of aspartame since it was introduced in 1981 as the tabletop sweetener Equal. Now it is used in dozens of products, including pudding, chewing gum and diet soft drinks.

Wurtman agreed that the apparent association he reported could have been coincidental. But he said doctors should question patients with unexplained seizures about their use of aspartame.

"It may turn out that when enough doctors ask enough questions, there'll be no correlation," he said in an interview.

The three cases cited by Wurtman:

• A 42-year-old legal secretary drank four quarts of diet soda and close to a gallon of aspartame-containing lemonade each day. She reported mood changes, headaches, nausea, hallucinations, feelings of deja vu and finally a grand mal seizure. She drank no diet drinks while in the hospital, and her headaches disappeared for the first time in months, but they returned when she began drinking them again at home.

• A 27-year-old computer programmer, who drank four to five glasses a day of a powdered soft drink sweetened with NutraSweet, suffered nighttime twitching movements, abnormal breathing, a severe headache and a seizure. An epilepsy drug stopped the seizures, but the other symptoms lasted until he gave up the drink.

• A 36-year-old college professor who drank a quart or more a day of aspartame-sweetened ice tea suffered a seizure while sleeping.

Heybach speculated that their seizures might have been triggered by drinking such large amounts of fluids. He said there have been reports of people suffering seizures after consuming large quantities of water.

"I imagine it's possible that there may be individuals who are sensitive to aspartame," he said, "although there is no documented evidence of even a single individual having a clear-cut adverse reaction associated with aspartame to date, despite the fact that hundreds of millions of people use the product on a regular basis worldwide."

One of the main ingredients of aspartame is the amino acid phenylalanine. Wurtman suggests that consuming lots of aspartame can raise levels of phenylalanine in the brain, where it interferes with the body's production of other chemicals, known as neurotransmitters, that protect against seizures.

"I think, but I can't prove it, that this will only happen in people who have a propensity toward having seizures," Wurtman said. "Some of these people will know about that propensity because they've already had a seizure. The problem is people who never had them before."

Aspartame products are required to carry warning labels notifying people with phenylketonuria, or PKU, that the sweetener may be hazardous. People with PKU must avoid protein foods, such as meat, that contain phenylalanine.

House overrides veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted 380-32 Tuesday to override President Reagan's veto of a bill reauthorizing biomedical research at the National Institutes of Health for three years.

It was only the fifth time since Reagan took office in 1981 that the House had managed to get the necessary two-thirds of the members present to support an override.

The override measure was sent to the Senate, which had passed the bill unanimously. Last week, 78 senators wrote Reagan urging him to sign the measure.

In the House, opposition to Reagan was so strong that Republican leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., told his party colleagues they were "pretty free to do their thing."

Although Michel said it was normally his job to marshal Republicans in the Democratic-controlled House behind Reagan, he didn't feel the need in this case. The House had originally passed the bill, 395-10.

California man wins big, loses almost all, at Vegas slots

Daniel Mayhoefer, 83, faces problems with IRS over winnings

By ROBERT MACY
The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — It's one of those good news, bad news scenarios for Daniel Mayhoefer, a feisty 83-year-old—Los—Angeles man—who claims there's a witch in every slot machine and he has a knack of knowing when the witch is dead.

The good news is that he has won some $3.7 million playing at four $25 slots at the Las Vegas Hilton, astonishing casino chiefs with his ability to beat the odds.

The bad news is that he has played most of the money back in 18 days of tugging at the handle of his favorite machines and was ahead $25,000 as of Wednesday.

What could be worse?

He has also collected a pocketful of crumpled Internal Revenue Service forms indicating his gambling earnings ran nearly $928,000 during his casino binge.

How is he going to explain the predicament to the IRS next spring?

"When you're 80 years old, you become strong and bold," Mayhoefer bellowed above the din of the huge casino.

"I have a human spirit that likes to wander," Mayhoefer shrugged. "No government has a right to inhibit that."

Cecil Fredi, slot manager for the casino, said he was dumbfounded by Mayhoefer's winning streak.

"I've never seen anything like it in my 21 years in the business," Fredi said. "The guy is unbelievably lucky. Those machines pay out 98 percent, but still, as much as he's played, we should be ahead of him."

Mayhoefer, a native of Germany, appeared in the casino in early October and began playing the special $25 slots.

"He hit me for a $15,000 jackpot on his first morning here and never looked back," Fredi said. "Since that time, he's been playing on our money. It's not that the guy's wealthy or anything. It's just that he's been incredibly lucky."

Mayhoefer may have some trouble explaining his ability to win — and lose — to Uncle Sam.

Casinos are required to fill out a W2G form for anyone winning over $1,200. The winner signs the form and a copy is submitted to the IRS.

Mayhoefer's hot streaks have had casino workers shuttling back and forth with the W2G forms for him to sign on each slot jackpot running over $1,200. He nonchalantly crumples his copies and stuffs them in his pocket.

By the time he left to return to California in late October he had signed forms indicating winnings of $515,000 — although he walked away with about $10,000, Fredi said.

Mayhoefer returned to the Hilton with his 88-year-old wife, Mary, and his brother, Herbie, in late October. He quickly hit a $15,000 jackpot and just as quickly deposited the money with the casino cashier.

"I'm saving it for Christmas," he said, a wink tugging at his bearded face as he nodded toward the nearby casino cage.

Fredi said Mayhoefer won more than $2 million on the $25 slots in his 18-day stay in mid-October, and had won $1.7 million through Wednesday, eight days into his second trip to the resort.

As of Wednesday he had signed an additional $413,000 in W2G forms.

How will he explain his $928,000 in W2G forms to the IRS?

"I guess at 83, he just doesn't care," Fredi said. "This is a classic example of how unfair the IRS regulation is. Here's a guy who, according to the government, has won $928,000 when he's really about $25,000 ahead. It's up to the player to keep a record of their losses."

Mayhoefer showed little interest in discussing possible IRS storm clouds on his horizon. He chose instead to play to an ever-present audience of on-lookers, singing, dancing and clicking his heels each time he hit another winner.

Mayhoefer immigrated to America in the mid-1920s and spent his life as a painter and miner. He said he won his first jackpot in Las Vegas when the city was little more than a tiny cluster of casinos in what is now downtown's Glitter Gulch.

Air Force discharges gays

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Twelve enlisted men at F.E. Warren Air Force Base face administrative discharge because they are homosexual, base officials said Tuesday.

Air Force officials began an investigation in August after receiving information that homosexual activity was occurring on the base, a statement from the base public affairs office said.

The discharges were ordered because it's against military regulations to be homosexual, the statement said.

The base, located in southeastern Wyoming, is home to the 90th Strategic Missile Wing and is to command the MX nuclear missile system.

None of the 12 was identified because the discharges are an administrative action and the men are protected by the Privacy Act, the statement said.

Auto dealership will take wood in payment for new and used cars

NEWBERG, Ore. (AP) — If there was any doubt that Oregon's economy is based on wood, a Newberg auto dealer has provided proof by offering to take cords of firewood in payment for new or used cars.

The following advertisement has been appearing in two regional editions of a weekly want ad publication and the Sheridan Sun newspaper.

"We take wood in trade as down payment or full payment on new or used cars or trucks. We know times are tough so we're helping out by making this offer: up to $90 per cord delivered to Butler Chevrolet. Call for details."

So far much of the response to the advertisment has been amused disbelief.

However, John Gotter, manager of the 44-year-old dealership, said the ad is for real.

He hasn't taken wood in trade for a car since the ad first appeared, Gotter said, but last week he traded a used motorcycle for two cords of wood.

The cord-wood-for-cars idea isn't new, he said. The dealership has used it before, the first time about two years ago.

It works, Gotter said, although he couldn't say how many such deals he had made in the past.

It takes a while, however, for the public to start taking the ad seriously.

"We get a lot of calls from people who need an explanation, and just about as many from people who wonder if we'll sell whatever wood we have," Gotter said.

The ad gives examples of what a few cords of wood could buy. For example: 1972 International Travelall, $1,440 or 16 cords; '71 Ford Pickup with an 8-foot camper, $2,430 or 27 cords; '80 Plymouth TC3, $2,970 or 33 cords.

Gotter said the offer isn't limited to used vehicles. Like any good businessman, he said, he'll work out a deal on a new car, too.

The $90-per-cord is the maximum the dealership will allow.

"Wood is like cars — some types are just better than others," Gotter said. Dry, seasoned wood is going to fare better in a trade than wet, green stuff.

Little Western Montana College strikes it rich with athletes from Magic Valley, south Idaho

By STEVE CRUMP
Times-News sports editor

DILLON, Mont. — This western Montana cowtown, nestled a mile up in the flanks of the Rockies, is a world away from the potato fields of the Snake River Plain.

The football field is barely distinguishable from the field behind Beaverhead County High School a few miles away. It is dotted with crabgrass, dandelion stems and a few bare spots — when it isn't covered with snow. Certainly, it's a far cry from the the Minidome or Bronco Stadium, where some of these players spent their best high school days.

Welcome to Western Montana College, an NAIA school of 2,500 students and two score football players. A dozen and a half of those are Idahoans, and nearly two-thirds of that number are from the Magic Valley.

That's almost twice as many Magic Valley football players as there are on the rosters at Idaho State, Boise State, the University of Idaho and Ricks College combined.

For the better part of a decade, Western has been a haven for southern Idaho football players passed up by the Big Sky Conference, but now it isn't alone. Montana Tech, 60 miles up Interstate 15 in Butte, has a half-dozen Idahoans on its football roster, three of them from the Magic Valley. And at Carroll College in the state capital of Helena, Pocatello native Dave Romasko, a 220-pound fullback, has led the Saints to a Frontier Conference championship and into the NAIA post-season playoffs.

In Missoula, former Twin Falls High School quarterback Mike Rice has become a star wide receiver and kick returner since transferring from Washington's Spokane Falls Community College last year. He also leads the Big Sky Conference in punting, a specialty in which he now ranks third in the NCAA Division I-AA.

Montana football coaches have discovered southern Idaho in general and the Magic Valley in particular.

"It was just a logical place for us to look," says Don Christensen, the WMC football coach who started scouting the other side of Monida Pass for football players eight years ago. "Twin Falls is closer to Dillon than Billings."

The geography of Montana and the development of its sytem of higher education have forced WMC to look out of state in order to continue its football program. The western half of Montana contains six four-year colleges and universities and one junior college; five of those schools have football programs. When the school's coaches go to talk to a prospect in Missoula, 175 miles away, they often find that three or four other schools have gotten there first.

"A lot of it is just a question of identity," says Christensen, who has been recruiting Montana high school athletes for 15 years at Western and before that as an assistant coach at Montana State. "You go over to a small town in eastern Montana, the kind of town where I grew up, and the kids don't identify with Western Montana or Dillon. They know about Montana State.

"And a lot of it is just economics," he says. "You can spend two days driving over in eastern Montana to talk to one kid. If you go to Idaho, you can contact three or four kids at the same time."

Christensen says most of the athletes Western recruits aren't activity sought by Big Sky Conference schools, or if they are, it is only in a walk-on role.

"We don't really compete with the Idaho universities and we don't really compete with (Mormon-owned) Ricks," he says. "Most of the kids we recruit here couldn't play Big Sky football, but they can quite often do pretty well here. Because of the church connection, Ricks usually gets the kids it wants."

There has long been a reluctance on the part of the biggest Montana and Idaho schools to raid each other's turf, and in the cases of the Big Sky schools, that still holds at the freshman level.

"When I was at Montana State, we put a few kids from the Idaho Falls area on our recruiting list and one of our coaches went down there to talk to them. I don't think we had any success in getting any of them to come to Montana State, so that was the last year we did it."

Among the first Idahoans Christensen succeeded in getting to WMC were running backs Virgil and Larry Hurt and wide receiver Steve Galley, all of Twin Falls. The Hurts finished their collegiate football careers at Western, but Galley transferred to Brigham Young University following his sophomore season, walked on in football and earned himself a place on the team.

One example is Kirby Bright, a junior running back from Murtaugh who played his prep football at Minico High in Rupert.

"One day I was called called into the (school) office and here was this guy from Western Montana," says Bright, who has developed into a star running back at WMC. "They just kept in touch — it was the only real contact I had from a college program — and they eventually invited me to come up for a visit. I decided I liked it and I stayed."

Bright finished his season with 468 yards rushing and 330 yards receiving. His nine touchdowns ranked him second in the NAIA district that includes Montana and North Dakota.

"I haven't regretted coming here," he says. "It's given me a chance to play college football, which is something I've always wanted to do."

Marlin Mussmann, a sophomore from Eden, was a high school quarterback who attracted interest from several Idaho collegiate programs. But when it came down to offering scholarships, Western was the only school that called.

"I was just sitting at home watching TV, and they called and ask me to come up," said Mussmann. "It looked all right, so I decided to stay."

Mussmann, Western's starting flanker this year, caught 19 passes for 367 yards and two touchdowns.

Not surprisingly, the Magic Valley players at Western tend to think southern Idaho is under-recruited by the Big Sky.

"I think the Idaho schools are more interested in looking out of state than they are at recruiting in-state," says Shawn Carder, a junior defensive back from Burley. "A lot of them, I think, don't really know what's there."

Many Idaho players go to WMC hoping someday to transfer to more prestigious programs. But, says Christensen, very few do.

"We do lose some kids before they use up their eligibility, but the cases like Steve Galley are really an exception. Most of the kids who come here are capable of performing at this level. In most cases, if they could play Big Sky football, that's where they'd be."

Christensen says his program doesn't get many referrals from the Idaho universities, but that Western receives a lot of help from Idaho prep football coaches.

"The coaches are pretty good about telling us where the players are," he says. "They know what kind of program we run and they want their players to succeed in a college program if they can."

The lure of Western to Idaho students isn't financial.

"One is the town — Dillon's a small town. We find that kids we recruit from small towns in southern Idaho fit in here. That's why we don't recruit too much in Boise. The culture shock is just too great.

"Another is the school. We tell a kid that if he has a problem with Math 101, he doesn't need a tutor. He just goes up to the professor and says, 'I need some help.' The professor says, 'Fine, meet me in the cafeteria after the next class. We'll have a cup of coffee and talk about it.' That's something you don't find at bigger colleges, and it appeals to kids from small high schools."

Gooden wins NL Cy Young

By JOHN NELSON
The Associted Press

NEW YORK — Soft-spoken but hard-throwing Dwight Gooden of the New York Mets became the youngest pitcher ever to win the Cy Young Award Wednesday, admitting "things have moved pretty rapidly in my career."

Gooden, who will turn 21 Saturday, received unanimous acclaim as the best pitcher in the National League last season in voting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

"This is a goal of every pitcher," Gooden said at a news conference at Shea Stadium after the award was announced. "But I'm also looking forward to getting into the playoffs, maybe next year."

Can Kendrick stop Oakley?

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

POCATELLO — Neither knows a lot about the other, but there's little doubt that when Kendrick and Oakley square off in the Class A-1 state football finals Friday afternoon, they'll bring mutual respect to the Minidome floor.

"We know that they are primarily a good, basic football team that can throw and run," says Oakley Coach Don Tompkins of the Tigers, 5-4 and ranked third in the final Associated Press prep football poll.

"All we know is they've been ranked No. 1 all year, they're undefeated with pretty good speed and pretty big and while they seemed to be a ground team most of the year, against Wilder (in the semifinals) they threw the ball some," responds Kendrick Coach Terry Webb.

The teams also draw their emotions from different sides of the well. Oakley has the determination of a team that lost a chance for all the marbles against Mullan in last year's finals and the tradition of having lost just twice in the past three years.

On the other hand, Kendrick, which defeated Mullan to get here, has the tradition of being winless three years ago and being in the playoffs for the first time ever.

That gives Kendrick a kind of "gee-whiz" approach.

"When I came here three years ago, Kendrick was, well, kind of a non-contender," Webb says. "It's always been a great basketball town — they won state last year — and we've been working toward making it a football town, too. Three years ago Kendrick didn't win a game and now we're kinda surprised to be there. We don't have real good size and we aren't very deep but these kids have played hard.

It's more businesslike from Oakley's point of view, especially after making it to the finals and then being rebuffed last year.

"We've worked hard and some of the kids have really come through," says Tompkins, whose team is 10-0 this season. "These kids have lost two games in the three years of varsity ball that I've been here and I think it would be a shame to come twice to the finals) and not get it. I'd like to see it from the sheer standpoint of letting the players accomplish their goal. I think we'll be hungry. If everything goes okay, it'll be a good ballgame."

Kendrick is a relatively young team, led by sophomore quarterback Ron Huett, a 5-foot-10, 145-pounder. "He doesn't run too much. He provides our leadership and everything starts from him," Webb says.

When Huett hands off it's either to junior Tom Parks, a 180-pound junior, or his brother, Jim Woods, a 170-pound sophomore.

"Both of them have fair speed but basically they're power runners who can show real strength at times," Webb says.

When Huett looks for a receiver, — and he can throw it 60 yards,

Pomerelle to open on Friday

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

ALBION — The 1985-86 ski season opens in Magic Valley Friday when lifts and other facilities at Pomerelle begin operating on regular schedule.

Resort owner Woody Anderson said Wednesday night that the runs have been packed several times with 25 inches of snow at the top of the mountain and 16 inches at the lodge.

"We should have excellent skiing on the upper slopes and marginal at the bottom," he said.

The resort will run both chair lifts, with the ski lodge, cafeteria, rental shop and ski school operating.

"Starting Friday, we will be on our regular season-schedule of skiing every day except Monday. We won't open night skiing until December, about the time the schools close for the holiday vacation," Anderson said.

The road to the resort was plowed Wednesday and is in good condition although snow tires or chains are always recommended.

Lift passes will sell for the same price as they have for the past several years. The day pass remains at $12 with lifts opening at 10 a.m. and close at 4:30 p.m.

This year Woody and Sandy Anderson will be joined at the resort by his daughter, Jody Anderson, as manager and John Burrows as mountain manager. The two operated Magic Mountain, south of Twin Falls, for several years prior to the sale of that resort last yeear. Both Woody and Sandy Anderson will continue to work at Pomerelle but are turning some of the responsibilities over to the new manger

'Cats, Jerome win in Jerome tourney

By RON GATES
Times-News writer

JEROME — An all Jerome County overtime battle and a Burley-Minico rematch decided the pairings for today's wind-up of the Magic Valley Invitational Tournament.

The Bobcats fought their way into the 8:30 championship finale by holding on in the last four seconds to outdistance the Spartans 44-42. In the opener Jerome's Tigers rallied in overtime to stop Valley 40-36.

Jerome 40, Valley 36

In the Jerome-Valley game, the first quarter ended in a four-all tie.

The fast and furious pace resulted in a bonus situation for each only 20 second into the next period. But the Vikings were held to a single fielder as Jerome pulled away on a three-point play by Janet Bryant and increased the bulge to nine by halftime.

The shooting warmed in the second half as Valley mounted a comeback to cut the margin to two. Consecutive goals by Tiffany Crist and Kim McKay kept the Tigers on top heading into the last eight minutes.

Burley 44, Minico 41

It looked like a shooting exhibition right off with the Spartans and Bobcats trading baskets on high percentage shots. Although Burley generally held the upper hand, their lead was never more than four. A Rose Stuart 18-footer just before the horn put Minico on top 12-10.

Burley's Hettie Dejong, a 5-foot-10 junior, put 10 second quarter points on the board as Burley moved out to an eight point lead. During that span only Stuart lit up the scoreboard for the Spartans. With just over a minute remaining in the half the Spartans sandwiched an Ellen Doane layin between a pair of Lorna McPherson two-pointers to keep it at two at the break.

For the next 3:15 neither team could score until Kellie Thornton canned a foul shot to get the Bobcats off 24. Doane was the only Spartan to score in the third.

Gooden

Gooden also became the first pitcher to win Rookie-of-the-Year and Cy Young awards in successive seasons. The right-hander had a record of 24-4 and led the National League in earned run average, strikeouts, complete games and innings pitched.

So, what can he do for an encore?

"Last year, I won the rookie award, and that was special because you only have one chance. And the Cy Young is a great honor after finishing second last year. ... You just try to do a little bit better each year," he said. "A World Series ring sure would be great."

and mountain manager Anderson said.

The resort has not had any major changes during the summer months, but has continued the usual groom-ing of runs and maintenance of equipment. Sandy Anderson said a number of area schools have already signed up for ski classes at Pomerelle and early indications are that it will be another busy season at the resort.

Oakley

What seniors Kendrick uses are found in the line — Tony Jenson, 175, and center Jon Fey, 180, being the most notable. The biggest is 236-pound junior Brent Hutcheson, who stands 6-3.

The one thing that bothers Webb most is the lack of numbers.

"We have nine guys who got both ways and the two that aren't are interchangeable with another two so we basically rely on 13 players all the time," he says.

But Webb thinks Kendrick has two things going for it — momentum and superstition.

On the first part he notes "we wound up 7-4 — if you count the tie-breaker (a three-way playoff with Troy and Genesee) we had — and we were 1-3 in our first four games, so we've won six of our last seven."

On the latter, he adds, "we've been getting a little ink in that we haven't lost in all black (uniforms) this year — and, yes, we'll be wearing black Friday."

Webb adds "last Friday we had to wear white, which had our fans worried. But with five seconds left, our players peeled off their white jerseys and exposed the black ones they were wearing underneath. Our fans went crazy."

While Tompkins says he doesn't have a very good line on Kendrick, he knows enough to believe "on offense we have to control the ball and on defense we have to stop their running and make them throw. If they control the ball, they can balance their offense up and you have to take one — pass or run — away from them."

Webb said his report on Oakley's throwing in the Wilder game had left his game plans up in the air somewhat.

"We'd heard that Oakley was basically a running team, especially with (Joel) Elquist," Webb said. "But I guess we'll just have to go into the game ready for anything and adjust as we go along. I don't like going in without a better defensive game plan than that."

Hobart emerges as key in CFL East Division final

MONTREAL (AP) — As far as Montreal Coach Gary Durchik is concerned, it's too late in the season for his Concordes to try new approaches.

"We have to do the same thing we did last week," Durchik said as Montreal resumed practice Wednesday for their Canadian Football League East Division final on Sunday against the Tiger-Cats in Hamilton, Ontario.

"We have to stop the opposing quarterback. That's the key," said Durchik.

The Concordes successfully used that approach last Sunday when they stopped J. C. Watts, the scrambling Ottawa Rough Rider quarterback, en route to a 30-20 victory.

Durchik, however, believes his club faces a bigger challenge in Hamilton's Ken Hobart.

"He's the best running quarterback in the league," Durchik said of the former University of Idaho All-American. "He's big and he's strong, and he gets outside real well.

"Our job is going to be to contain him and take away his game."

While Montreal's defenders will be busy worrying about Hobart, the Hamilton defense should have its hands full with the resurgent Concordes offense led by Joe Barnes.

"Barnes is an old pro who can be very patient," said Hamilton secondary coach Rich Stubler. "And when it gets down to cases, with everything on the line, he can be very, very tough."

Barnes completed 28 of 40 passes for 344 yards and one touchdown, leading the Montreal offense to a net total of 406 yards.

The veteran was successful because he used seven different receivers, many of them on short pass routes.

"That's the type of game we have to play," Barnes said. "We have to take advantage of what the defenses will give us and as long as we can establish ball control, we'll be alright."

The Concordes are healthy — only wide receiver Kris Haines is a doubtful starter — and have the momentum that goes along with three consecutive victories.

The Tiger-Cats, on the other hand, have had more than two weeks to rest and prepare for the game. For a change, the controversy that usually surrounds Hamilton and owner Harold Ballard at playoff time is nowhere to be found.

As the Tiger-Cats headed into postseason play last season, they were described by Ballard as a "bunch of overpaid bums," while linebacker Ben Zambiasi was critiquing the defensive coaches for producing a game plan barely fit for high school ball.

"I was speaking for 12 players who were frustrated because we thought we were getting beaten on positioning, not by talent," Zambiasi said of his remarks. "If I had to do it again, I'd do it differently, but from that bad experience we came together."

The Hamilton defense is still together, setting a league-record 46 interceptions while allowing the second-fewest number of passes completed and yards rushed against.

"You have to give credit to the coaches and players for making it work," Zambiasi said. "Every guy has trust and confidence in the guy next to him.

"We don't want to let the other guy down."

JEROME — Sportsmen wanting to get in one last word on the five-year waterfowl or black bear management plans may still do so at the regional headquarters of the Idaho Fish and Game Department in Jerome.

Regional Wildlife Manager Craig Kvale said today and Friday will wind up the public review period for the waterfowl study. Department personnel will take statments from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day.

The black bear plan remains open to comment through the end of the month. Plans are available if anyone would like to pick one up and read it before making any comment, Kvale said.

He noted "these are the last two of the several five-year plans we've put together this year. They will go to the State (Fish and Game) commission for final action in January."

Collins to Tigers

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Tigers have traded infielder Barbaro Garbey to the Oakland A's for switch-hitting outfielder Dave Collins, the American League club said Wednesday.

Last season, Collins batted .251 for Oakland, appearing in 112 games. He tallied 52 runs, 29 RBI and 29 stolen bases.

Garbey, 28, came to America from Cuba in 1980 and has played for the Tigers the past two seasons. This past season, he batted .257 with six home runs and 29 RBI in 86 games.

Bosox, Mets deal

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets obtained left-handed pitcher Bob Ojeda from Boston Wednesday in an eight-player trade that sent two young pitchers to the Red Sox, the Mets said.

The Mets sent right-handers Calvin Schiraldi and Wes Gardner to the Red Sox along with outfielders John Christensen and La Schelle Tarver. Coming to the Mets along with Ojeda will be three other young pitchers — Tom McCarthy, John Mitchell and Chris Bayer.

Ojeda, 27, was 9-11 with a 4.00 ERA last year, his third full season with the Red Sox. Ojeda was 12-12 with a 3.99 ERA in 1984. Ojeda is 44-39 lifetime, having first seen action in the majors in 1980 with the Red Sox.

'Cats, Jerome win in Jerome tourney

By RON GATES
Times-News writer

JEROME — All all Jerome County overtime battle and a Burley-Minico rematch decided the pairings for today's wind-up of the Magic Valley Invitational Tournament.

The Bobcats fought their way into the 8:30 championship finale by holding on in the last four seconds to outdistance the Spartans 44-42. In the opener Jerome's Tigers rallied in overtime to stop Valley 40-36.

Jerome 40, Valley 36

In the Jerome-Valley game, the first quarter ended in a four-all tie.

The fast and furious pace resulted in a bonus situation for each only 20 second into the next period. But the Vikings were held to a single fielder as Jerome pulled away on a three-point play by Janet Bryant and increased the bulge to nine by halftime.

The shooting warmed in the second half as Valley mounted a comeback to cut the margin to two. Consecutive goals by Tiffany Crist and Kim McKay kept the Tigers on top heading into the last eight minutes.

Burley 44, Minico 41

It looked like a shooting exhibition right off with the Spartans and Bobcats trading baskets on high percentage shots. Although Burley generally held the upper hand, their lead was never more than four. A Rose Stuart 18-footer just before the horn put Minico on top 12-10.

Burley's Hettie DeJong, a 5-foot-10 junior, put 10 second quarter points on the board as Burley moved out to an eight point lead. During that span only Stuart lit up the scoreboard for the Spartans. With just over a minute remaining in the half the Spartans sandwiched an Ellen Doane layin between a pair of Lorna McPherson two-pointers to keep it at two at the break.

For the next 3:15 neither team could score until Kellie Thornton canned a foul shot to get the Bobcats off 24. Doane was the only Spartan to score in the third.

Webb says — his first checkpoint usually is 6-3, 170-pound junior flanker Brian Parks. "Not so much speed as possession. He's got good hands, he gets open and just does a good job," Webb reports.

What seniors Kendrick uses are found in the line — Tony Jenson, 175, and center Jon Fey, 180, being the most notable. The biggest is 236-pound junior Brent Hutcheson, who stands 6-3.

The one thing that bothers Webb most is the lack of numbers.

"We have nine guys who got both ways and the two that aren't are interchangeable with another two so we basically rely on 13 players all the time," he says.

But Webb thinks Kendrick has two things going for it — momentum and superstition.

On the first part he notes "we wound up 7-4 — if you count the tie-breaker (a three-way playoff with Troy and Genesee) we had — and we were 1-3 in our first four games, so we've won six of our last seven."

On the latter, he adds, "we've been getting a little ink in that we haven't lost in all black (uniforms) this year — and, yes, we'll be wearing black Friday."

Webb adds "last Friday we had to wear white, which had our fans worried. But with five seconds left, our players peeled off their white jerseys and exposed the black ones they were wearing underneath. Our fans went crazy."

While Tompkins says he doesn't have a very good line on Kendrick, he knows enough to believe "on offense we have to control the ball and on defense we have to stop their running and make them throw. If they control the ball, they can balance their offense up and you have to take one — pass or run — away from them."

Webb said his report on Oakley's throwing in the Wilder game had left his game plans up in the air somewhat.

"We'd heard that Oakley was basically a running team, especially with (Joel) Elquist," Webb said. "But I guess we'll just have to go into the game ready for anything and adjust as we go along. I don't like going in without a better defensive game plan than that."

Gooden

Gooden also became the first pitcher to win Rookie of the Year and Cy Young awards in successive seasons. The right-hander had a record of 24-4 and led the National League in earned run average, strikeouts, complete games and innings pitched.

"Last year, I won the rookie award, and that was special because you only have one chance. And the Cy Young is a great honor after finishing second last year. ... You just try to do a little bit better each year," he said. "A World Series ring sure would be great."

Gooden results announced Wednesday, received 120 points.

and mountain manager, Anderson said.

The resort has not had any major changes during the summer months, but has continued the usual grooming of runs and maintenance of equipment. Sandy Anderson said a number of area schools have already signed up for ski classes at Pomerelle and early indications are that it will be another busy season at the resort.

Honor roll: It was Miller's week on the lanes

TWIN FALLS — It was Jerry Miller's week last week at the Magic Bowl and the Bowladrome.

Miller bowled five of top 15 games in town last week as well as four of the top seven series, including the best three. That week's work included games of 256, 248, 244 and 243 and series of 729, 723 and 693.

That 729, which came in the Valley League at the Magic Bowl, was the best in the city last week. Roy Killinger, who bowls with the Magic Majors League at the Magic Bowl, had the best game, a 277.

Karen Poe had the top women's game last week, a 252 in the Sh-Boom League at the Bowladrome. Deoine Moore had far and away the top women's series, a 627 with the Magic City League at the Bowladrome.

KEN HOBART
Multiple threat

Hobart emerges as key in CFL East Division final

Pro football

MONTREAL (AP) — As far as Montreal Coach Gary Durchik is concerned, it's too late in the season for his Concordes to try new approaches.

"We have to do the same thing we did last week," Durchik said as Montreal resumed practice Wednesday for their Canadian Football League East Division final on Sunday against the Tiger-Cats in Hamilton, Ontario.

"We have to stop the opposing quarterback. That's the key," said Durchik.

The Concordes successfully used that approach last Sunday when they stopped J. C. Watts, the scrambling Ottawa Rough Rider quarterback, en route to a 30-20 victory.

Durchik, however, believes his club faces a bigger challenge in Hamilton's Ken Hobart.

"He's the best running quarterback in the league," Durchik said of the former University of Idaho All-American. "He's big and he's strong and he gets outside real well.

"Our job is going to be to contain him and take away his game."

While Montreal's defenders will be busy worrying about Hobart, the Hamilton defense should have its hands full with the resurgent Concordes offense led by Joe Barnes.

"Barnes is an old pro who can be very patient," said Hamilton secondary coach Rich Stubler. "And when it gets down to cases, with everything on the line, he can be very, very tough."

Barnes, acquired late in the season from the Calgary Stampeders, was shakey in his regular season performances with Montreal, but he reaffirmed his reputation as clutch player with his winning effort against Ottawa.

Barnes completed 28 of 40 passes for 344 yards and one touchdown, leading the Montreal offense to a net total of 406 yards.

The veteran was successful because he used seven different receivers, many of them on short pass routes.

"That's the type of game we have to play," Barnes said. "We have to take advantage of what the defenses will give us and as long as we can establish ball control, we'll be alright."

The Concordes are healthy — only wide receiver Kris Haines is a doubtful starter — and have the momentum that goes along with three consecutive victories.

The Tiger-Cats, on the other hand, have had more than two weeks to rest and prepare for the game. For a change, the controversy that usually surrounds Hamilton and owner Harold Ballard at playoff time is nowhere to be found.

As the Tiger-Cats headed into postseason play last season, they were described by Ballard as a "bunch of overpaid bums," while linebacker Ben Zambiasi was criticizing the defensive coaches for producing a game plan barely fit for high school ball.

"I was speaking for 12 players who were frustrated because we thought we were getting beaten on positioning, not by talent," Zambiasi said of his remarks. "If I had to do it again, I'd do it differently, but from that bad experience we came together."

The Hamilton defense is still together, setting a league-record 46 interceptions while allowing the second-fewest number of passes completed and yards rushed against.

"You have to give credit to the coaches and players for making it work," Zambiasi said. "Every guy has trust and confidence in the guy next to him.

"We don't want to let the other guy down."

Comment sought

JEROME — Sportsmen wanting to get in one last word on the five-year waterfowl or black bear management plans may still do so at the regional headquarters of the Idaho Fish and Game Department in Jerome.

Regional Wildlife Manager Craig Kvale said today and Friday will wind up the public review period for the waterfowl study. Department personnel will take statments from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day.

The black bear plan remains open to comment through the end of the month. Plans are available if anyone would like to pick one up and read it before making any comment, Kvale said.

He noted "these are the last two of the several five-year plans we've put together this year. They will go to the State (Fish and Game) commission for final action in January."

Collins to Tigers

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Tigers have traded infielder Barbaro Garbey to the Oakland A's for switch-hitting outfielder Dave Collins, the American League club said Wednesday.

Last season, Collins batted .251 for Oakland, appearing in 112 games. He tallied 52 runs, 29 RBI and 29 stolen bases.

Garbey, 28, came to America from Cuba in 1980 and has played for the Tigers the past two seasons. This past season, he batted .257 with six home runs and 29 RBI in 86 games.

Bosox, Mets deal

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Mets obtained left-handed pitcher Bob Ojeda from Boston Wednesday in an eight-player trade that sent two young pitchers to the Red Sox, the Mets said.

The Mets sent right-handers Calvin Schiraldi and Wes Gardner to the Red Sox along with outfielders John Christensen and La Schelle Tarver. Coming to the Mets along with Ojeda will be three other young pitchers — Tom McCarthy, John Mitchell and Chris Bayer.

Ojeda, 27, was 9-11 with a 4.00 ERA last year, his third full season with the Red Sox. Ojeda was 12-12 with a 3.99 ERA in 1984. Ojeda is 44-39 lifetime, having first seen action in the majors in 1980 with the Red Sox.

Bighorns coming home

Forest Service-state plan returns sheep to historic South Hills range

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

MURTAUGH — Bighorn sheep will return to the Cassia Division of the Sawtooth National Forest within the next several days if all things go according to plan.

California bighorns from Owyhee County will be provided by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game in a cooperative effort with the U.S. Forest Service in the Big Cottonwood and Dry Creek drainages.

The re-introduction project is scheduled for next week, perhaps as early as Monday, if weather cooperates. But in any case, weather can only delay the project.

John Caywood, who conducted the environmental assessment study and completed that in 1982 for the Forest Service, says the project is the result of a conversation he had with Gary Will — then Region 4 wildlife manager and now game bird manager for the Idaho department — several years ago.

"We were kicking around ideas and this is one of the things that managed to float," Caywood remembered Wednesday. "It's been a four-year effort from start to finish but it's great seeing it all coming together. It's really exciting in a world where things come so slowly."

Caywood said the idea came from the historical fact that the South Hills harbored bighorns when the first settlers hit this country. A combination of domestic sheep diseases and over-hunting led to the species disappearance for over 60 years.

"Since it is part of their historic range, we know they'll take," said Caywood of the herd's chances of survival.

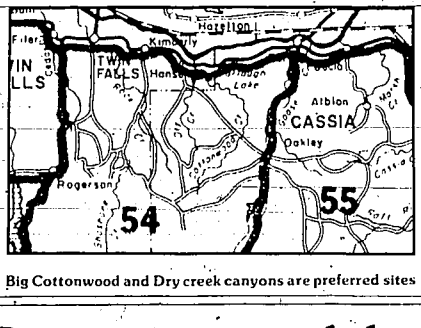
With that in mind, Caywood started the long process. The first was selecting an area and for several reasons, the Cottonwood Creek-Dry Creek area kept coming up on top under all rating systems.

Caywood said these criteria included the area having few roads which limits access by man. Other factors included the area being in the district's lightest precipitation zone, having rather steep south-facing slopes that provide escapement on one hand and also remain relatively snow free during the winter, and the fact domestic sheep aren't and have not been grazed there for many years. That should keep disease outbreaks at a minimum, he said.

In addition, Caywood pointed out the bighorn project dovetails well with the other designations felt important for the area. These include a restriction in roads and a closure to all four-wheel vehicle travel although some trails will be open for trail machines and hikers.

The area has previously been identified by the Forest Service as a critical mule deer winter area and Big Cottonwood is a "very high-grade cutthroat stream. That species is very susceptible to over-fishing and it's best to limit access to them," Caywood said.

This summertime sheep roundup will be re-enacted to provide bighorns for South Hills reintroduction next week



Big Cottonwood and Dry creek canyons are preferred sites

He added the area also has been identified as a preferred site for possible wild turkey translocations in the near future.

"The sheep don't need a lot of people, the deer need a place to get out to and there are just so many places," Caywood said. "It is unique to have such a place south of the Snake River. There's logic to the site."

Since completing his assessment study, Caywood has worked toward bringing the various land-use groups together. These include livestock interests which hold the grazing rights, the outdoor groups and a number of other things.

With that all coming together, the two governmental agencies made one last check of their assessment.

"This summer we went in with (department biologist) Dale Towell — he's a super bighorn sheep man, to take a second look and flew the whole South Hills in a fixed-wing aircraft. He picked out five or six reintroduction sites and we visited them on the ground the same day. We then came back to Big Cottonwood as being the best site," Caywood said.

Craig Kvale, Region 4 wildlife manager, said the sheep planted with be California strain and come from the Idaho herd in Owyhee County. Those sheep will be descended from some obtained from Canada in a wildlife trade several years ago. The California bighorn will be the only species used in translocations to Idaho sites south of Snake River.

If this project can be brought off next week, it will give the department a jump on the 1986-90 bighorn sheep management plan. The South Hills were given a priority listing on translocations in that plan.

Kvale said the original planting probably will be something in the 10-head area with two supplemental plantings "which may take two more winters.

"We've had success at establishing populations with small numbers but 30 head seems to give an area a good test," he said. "That this area historically supported bighorns is a big plus in our expecting success. It definitely has the type of habitat that will support sheep and one thing I especially like about Big Cottonwood canyon is it is more remote than the other possible sites which lowers harassment and poaching incidents.

"No shortage of wildlife or domestic forage has been identified in any Forest Service study of the area," he continued. "The fact no domestic sheep have used the area for years is a shield from disease."

He said initial plans call for the first transplantees to be driven by helicopter into drive nets and then trucked to the release site the same day.

With the latest snowstorm, Kvale said the truck might not be feasible and "we'll probably have a helicopter backup so we can drop them in by air if we have to."

Disease, age, philosophy work against Jerome bird farm

By DONITA COTTER
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Farms are facing hard times in Idaho these days, and the Idaho Department of Fish and Game's Jerome Game Farm is no exception.

The department's proposed Upland Game Species Management Plan for 1986-90 provides a detailed cost-benefit analysis of the game farm's operations. Based on that analysis, the department will choose one of seven alternatives for the game farm's future.

Two of those alternatives involve sale of Idaho's only state-operated game farm.

Deteriorating facilities, disease problems, budget reductions, and a changing philosophy on the value of stocking game birds will be considered in the department's analysis.

Pheasants are raised at the game farm for supplemental stocking of wild populations on state-owned management areas in southern Idaho. The game farm also produces pheasant and chukar chicks for distribution in the Day-old Chick Program. Chukars for the Chukar Recovery Program were also raised at the farm the last two years.

According to State Game Bird Manager Gary Will, the game farm's foremost problem is that it is a very old facility. Little renovation has occurred since the game farm opened in 1932. The original pens and wire are still in use, the incubators are 1940 models and the last major construction project was a brooder house built in 1959.

The facility's age creates disease problems, too.

"The soil has had birds on it every year since the 1930s so it's very contaminated," says Will. "Raising large numbers of birds under crowded conditions stresses the birds, making them more susceptible to disease and parasites."

This year's $88,900 budget is down from $127,300 for last year, and raising game birds is expensive. Although the exact costs for birds raised at the Jerome facility are unknown, estimates from other states indicate a cost of $15 to $25 to raise a 12-14 week-old bird for release.

According to Game Farm Superintendent Wally Ekren, only 3,000 pheasant roosters were raised for release each year the last two years compared to 5,000 to 6,000 in previous years.

The department has also evaluated the practicality of stocking pen-reared birds to supplement established breeding populations. In addition to the expense, studies indicate that pen-reared birds have a low survival rate and limited contribution to production.

The proposed plan states that "stocking reflects a viewpoint that fails to recognize the ultimate cause of population declines — lack of suitable habitat acting in conjunction with weather to limit numbers."

The chukar program had its start at the 50-year old farm

These pheasant-filled raceways have stood since before World War II at the Jerome game bird farm

According to Will, there is plenty of premium chukar habitat in the state and the two-year recovery program has been successful.

"However, there is a shortage of good permanent nesting and winter habitat for pheasants," he says. "We will be looking at a number of approaches to improve habitat and contacting key states with experience in pheasant management to see what works."

Under the two sale alternatives, stocking would be discontinued or interest on sale money used to purchase birds for stocking and to acquire upland habitat.

Other alternatives in the plan include complete renovation of existing facilities, construction of new facilities or turning over the operation to the state penitentiary, the Idaho Boys' Ranch at Rupert or the State Juvenile Detention Center at St. Anthony.

Another consideration in the game farm's future will be the public's reaction. The plan recognizes that "stocking programs still appeal to the general public." Ekren estimates that the Day-old Chick Program distributed 4,300 pheasant chicks and 9,500 chukar chicks to sportsmen's groups in 1984. The groups raise the birds and release them in areas specified by the department.

Will says public response has been "mixed at this point. Only a handful of people attended the recent public meetings. Fewer people have been involved than for the department's other five-year management plans."

Public comments on the game farm alternatives will be reviewed within the department's Bureau of Wildlife and recommendations will be made to Department Director Jerry Conley and the Idaho Fish and Game Commission.

If the commission acts on the new plan in January 1986, as scheduled, the department will move quickly on implementation, Will says. He stresses that fish and game has not yet identified a preferred, alter-native.

Keeping an eye on Yellowstone grizzlies is 8-month chore

Pilot monitors 18 radio-collared bears

WEST YELLOWSTONE, Mont. (AP) — The grizzly bear sow leads her two cubs from the outskirts of the village and into Yellowstone National Park as the single-engined airplane clears trees.

Pilot Dave Stradley reaches behind his seat to aim an antenna towards the moving bear while he calmly banks the plane. "She's just moved out of town," he says.

In his earphones he hears the speeded up "tock, tock" sound that tells him a radio-collared grizzly is on the move. By the signal's frequency he knows it's Bear No. 50, a sow that has worn a radio collar since 1980. She runs a couple of miles, then stops in a thick stand of lodgepole pine near the Madison River.

Stradley circles the plane, hoping for a glimpse of the familiar bear and her two young-of-the-year cubs. But she's been chased before and keeps well-hidden. Only the family's tracks and the constant "tock, tock" of the receiver give away their location.

Bear 50 likes West Yellowstone. She was trapped there in 1981 and shipped to the other side of the park when she began getting into garbage.

When natural foods were low again in 1984, Bear 50 returned to feed on the easily-available garbage in the village. She was transported away then, too, but this year she is back again.

Only this year garbage is not available to attract her. The West Yellowstone-Hegben Lake area instituted a bear-proofing program for refuse storage.

"This year there is no record of her being in trouble since West Yellowstone cleaned up their garbage," said Dick Knight, coordinator for the Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee's research team.

Also, the bountiful natural food supply this year has dramatically reduced the number of bear-human conflicts throughout the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem.

Interior Secretary Donald Hodel and Forest Service Chief Max Peterson have expressed optimism that the Yellowstone grizzly population is improving. But some grizzly bear researchers are willing to go only so far as to say there are signs of a decrease in the mortality rate.

Knight and other members of his team also are not ready to add their influential voices to the optimism expressed by Hodel and Peterson.

"We haven't got any data that says the population is improving," Knight said. "We do have data that says management techniques are improving."

Garbage clean-up is just one of the management efforts that appears to be showing signs of success. Officials in the national forests that surround Yellowstone have also put in place strict rules for livestock grazers, campers and outfitters who venture into grizzly territory.

But grizzly bear deaths continue at an alarming rate on the Yellowstone population, which is estimated at about 300 bears. Seven bears are known to have died in 1985 at the hands of man and at least four died naturally, said Knight. That is the same number that died in 1984.

The death toll grimly reminds land managers of the uphill battle they still face. One grizzly was killed by a black bear hunter in Wyoming during the spring season. A second bear was killed by an automobile in Yellowstone this summer.

Two were killed by Montana officials because of habitual problems and a lack of fear of people. Another was found dead south of Yellowstone in August and two were killed illegally in Wyoming during the fall hunting season.

"I don't see a real trend downward," said Larry Roop, who heads Wyoming's grizzly management efforts. "Management has eliminated a lot of mortality, but we're hanging in there with the same mortality rate."

As the plane flies over the Madison and Central plateaus, Stradley, a 25-year veteran of wildlife flights over the park, tells Bear 50's story. The cubs we saw, he said, are her second pair since she began wearing the radio collar.

He points to her den near Central Creek. "This is her country," he says with a tone of respect.

Stradley steers the Piper Supercub east over the Hayden Valley toward the park's east boundary. Suddenly, his trained eyes spot two, light-brown grizzlies sauntering east, south of Trout Creek. "They sure are healthy," he says. "They'd both go about 450 pounds."

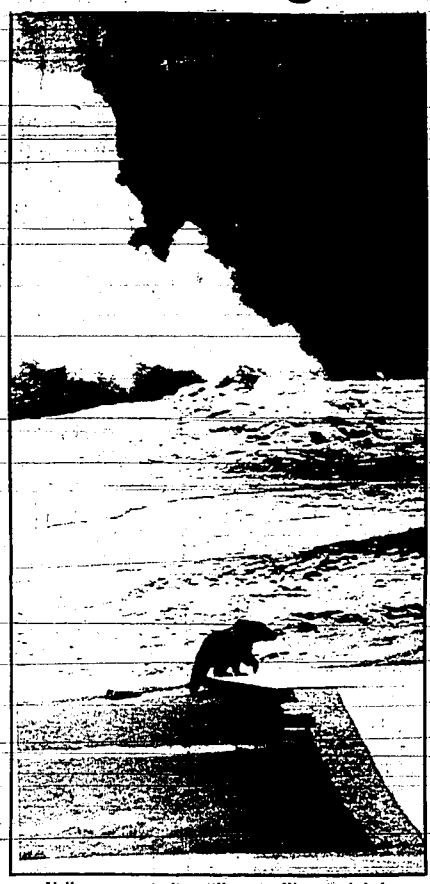
The real work begins for Stradley when he crosses into the Pelican Valley and on into Shoshone National Forest east of the park. Wyoming continued to trap bears a year longer than anyone else, so more bears still have radio collars there. Also, said Roop, Wyoming has had more "problem" bears, which automatically get collars so they can be monitored.

It is also elk season, and the opportunistic grizzlies are more than happy to finish off any wounded elk or gut piles left by hunters. Unfortunately, they are also just as eager to steal elk meat left within reach or meal leftovers in one of the many hunting camps that dot the mountainous terrain.

Bear 86 and her two three-year-olds are found feeding on white bark pine nuts on a drainage at about 9,000 feet near the North Fork of the Shoshone River. The 15-year-old sow usually hangs out near Mt. Washburn. Earlier this year, she worried park officials when she showed little fear of people when confronted near Tower Junction and the Roosevelt Lodge.

Stradley guesses that she travelled the 30 miles or more in an effort to break off from her cubs. It is rare for cubs to hang on to their mother's apron strings beyond the second summer. But when the plane moves in close the tracks indicate that the cubs remain with their mother.

Bear 114's radio collar reveals his location southwest of Sheep Mesa. His family history is notorious. His sister, 113, was the prime suspect in the mauling death of a woman hiking in the park in 1984. She was sent off to a South Dakota zoo and he was relocated.



Yellowstone grizzlies will receive Wyoming's help

Bear 114 turned up again at Fishing Bridge and several other developments and was relocated again and again. Lately he has settled down but Roop said he is being watched closely.

Bears 106 and 43 are found milling around their dens. Since the ecosystem has provided a good larder this season, both are fat and nearly ready to head into their dens. It might be an indication that one or both may have cubs next year.

What a difference a year makes.

Bear 106 left her traditional home on Sheep Mesa, 20 miles east of the park, and got into trouble in several lodges and camps in 1984. She went into her den with three cubs.

The combination of food scarcity and the stress caused by an extra cub left its mark. Only one cub survived the winter.

Bear 43 shed her cubs this spring after the traditional two years of educating them to the wilds. Roop decribed her as "usually a good bear," who last year was seen in several camps and lodges in the Crandall area. "This year she's been in the proximity of all the places she was in last year and hasn't caused problems," said Roop.

Her son, Bear 111, may not have been as lucky. He hasn't been located all fall and Roop fears he may be another fatality, perhaps caught red-handed in an outfitter's camp.

A line of pack mules weaves its way through Red Canyon led by a Wyoming outfitter. His threat to the grizzly remains high but has diminished somewhat since Shoshone National Forest has installed bear-proof boxes and pulley-operated hanging poles at the most popular backcountry campsites.

The man-threatening period for grizzlies in the Yellowstone ecosystem lasts from late March to mid-November. Stradley makes his rounds about once a week during this crucial period.

One by one, the 17 bears that wear working radio collars will disappear as they den up. Winter will quiet the Yellowstone ecosystem and bring temporary peace to its grizzlies.

Wyoming sets goal of improving ecosystem

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — Wyoming wildlife officials have drafted a plan for recovery of the grizzly bear in the Yellowstone ecosystem, with the goal of removing the bear from a threatened species list and returning management to the state.

"Ultimately, we would like to see management revert back to the state," Game and Fish spokesman Larry Kruckenberg said Tuesday. "We are telling the public of Wyoming what our intentions are and what we'd like to see as grizzly bear management," he said. "We've never gone through this exercise before."

He said the federal grizzly bear managment program will be updated next year, and Wyoming's plan will be considered in that process. "This is a preliminary effort on our part to move our position forward," Kruckenberg said.

The agency will take public comment into consideration and almost certainly will have more meetings, he said.

The plan has two objectives:

—To maintain a pre-denning winter population of 300 grizzlies in the Yellowstone area;

—To maintain grizzlies in Yellowstone National Park, in suitable areas of Montana and Idaho and in Wyoming in existing federal management areas and in the drainages of the Greybull, Wood and Wind rivers in the Washakie Wilderness.

Under the plan, once grizzlies numbered 300, they would be declared recovered from the "threatened" status. Current estimates put the number at about 200, according to the plan.

The plan noted that currently occupied habitat could be at or near carrying capacity, and some bears are dispersing into areas that haven't been occupied recently.

Some of the grizzly habitat must expand into suitable areas, the plan said, although that could cause bears to wander into unsuitable areas with a high potential for conflict with man. Solutions suggested by the plan include transplanting young bears to unused suitable habitat, conditioning bears to avoid marginal habitat and humans and eliminating adult bears from marginal habitats through sport hunting or "control actions."

Bears also might be forced into unsuitable areas by poor food, the plan said. It suggested improving the suitable habitat by using controlled fires to increase nonforested habitat, by maximizing growth of white bark pine nuts and by maintaining enough elk to provide carrion and prey for bears.

The plan also noted the problem of grizzies' being attracted to human facilities and backcountry sites near suitable habitat. The recommended strategies are to eliminate as much as possible the attractants, to condition bears to avoid humans and their food, to eliminate bears when other options fail and humans are threatened and to avoid construction of permanent facilities near suitable habitat.

The plan said a major block to increasing the grizzly population is "man-caused mortality." It suggested educating the public to avoid grizzly areas, follow food storage guidelines and to minimize accidental shootings of gizzlies.

Idaho fine-tuning black bear operation

BOISE — Black bear management in Idaho will get some fine-turning in the next five years as biologists try to learn more about the species and how to better serve a variety of user group interests.

The Department of fish and Game's draft management plans for 1986-90 emphasizes that the different methods of hunting will be continued, the information base will be strengthened and management will be as uniform and comprehensive as possible to reduce any radical year-to-year changes.

Copies of the draft plan are available at department offices and public comment is invited through November. The Fish and Game Commission is expected to take the final action when it meets next January.

The draft plan states that black bear are managed "to provide continued recreational opportunity for hunting and non-hunter users.

"Its vulnerability to overharvest by several hunting techniques and its appeal to non-hunters as part of the our natural environment has created intense competition for the opportunity to hunt or view black bears. These conflicting demands are addressed in the plans."

Staff biologist Dale Toweill points out that black bear managemtn is very complex because the animals are hunted in the spring and fall during firearms seasons, by archers and by hunters with hounds.

Incidental hunting during big game seasons also adds to the harvest, Toweill says.

The department has receive many letters expressing concern that black bear populations are down, according to Toweill. "But we must expand our data base to learn more about harvest impact, hunter access and population characteristics."

Variety of hunting would be maintained with spring and fall seasons and the available of permits for hunting with hounds, although not necessarily in all management units each year. Some units could be reserved for a single type of hunting.

The draft plan states that the black bear ranks third behind deer and elk among big game species in terms of days of hunting recreation. A recent survey by outfitters and guides indicates their clients contributed more than $1 million annually to the Idaho economy while hunting black bear.

Department statistics for 1982 show that black bear hunters added over $2.5 million to the state's economy.

Indian Jim Nevil biography is Swen's latest historical topic

My goodness, how the notes pile up. Let me share some with you.

A recent column about Indian Jim brought a flood of response. Seems our area is hungry for history of our past.

Shirley Greener of Twin Falls donated a picture of Indian Jim to the Twin Falls County Museum. I have asked George Holmes of that facility to do a mite of checking.

Dan Rogerson of Eden tells me that he recalls his father pointing out a barrel full of rocks that designated the site of one of Indian Jim's wives' grave.

Newton T. Harrel of Twin Falls came up with more information on this subject and other contacts to make. Thanks to all.

Now I am in the process (10 years) of getting a history of Squaw Joe

Nevil or Néville, and his first wife Sara.

Sara was an Indian who may or may not have found gold in the South Hills. Upon her accidental death, she created a gold rush.

The level-wind reel has almost been declared a relic hereabouts. The new type level-wind is making a comeback and the casting distance record was made by using a level wind reel.

Last June, at the annual convention of outdoor writers, Ron Arra of Massachusetts cast an unbelieveable distance of 737 feet, 11 inches, using a graphite component level-wind reel with a 12-foot rod and 150-gram sinker.

Fish can see colors, say the scientists who study such things.

As soon as the study results were announced two years ago, a manufacturer came up with a device to help you select the proper colored lure for the water conditions you wish to fish.

The new device called Color-C-Lector, and sells for about $90. It is used by placing the invention into the water at designated depths and the Color-C-Lector will electronically select the best lure color.

At the $90 price, let's hope this fishing item will dispense into the great melting pot of fishing fancy.

Grandmother's household hints keep coming back to help.

New products abound to help us do everything. Several products are on the market to remove rust from metal.

Grandmother's solution for removing rust from her pans has gone untried for years. "Too simple," was the comment from members of the family when they read it.

Frau and I collect a lot of objects because they were remembered — not antiques, just collectibles. For years we could not resist the Log Cabin syrup cans that we found. All were rusty, and we never could find a product that could remove the rust, and restore them. Commercial products did not do the job. They were messy and left the object unsuitable for the tole painting frau wanted to put upon them.

Grandmother's solution to rusty pots was worth a try.

Her method was to fill a pot with dry hay, as full as it could hold, add water and the object that was rusty, and boil for hours.

Grandmother had her wood stove that was going all winter and this task may have been simple for her, but with an electric stove, we did the suggested method by using the frau's enamel canning pot. Frau noted that our house smelled like a stable, but we suffered the smell, and after several hours removed the smelly mixture outside and let it cool overnight.

Voila, the cans came out bright and clean, quick drying in the oven, and a little sanding, a base coat of paint and the frau is ready for the tole painting.

Beautiful hand-made Christmas presents.

Site preference will beat decoying set up almost everytime

Mike Harrop Outdoors

We could hear the geese baying as they lifted off the Alberta reservoir about 100 miles north of Wild Horse, Mont.

Straining our eyes into the frosty air, my hunting partner spotted them first — "here they come," he said.

We hunkered down into the pit blind, and waited for the big Canadian geese to swing our way. And as we watched, flight after flight passed within 100 yards, looked over our large decoy spread and continued on to their accustomed feeding field a mile or so away.

One flight — maybe the one we'd seen feeding at our hunting site the previous evening — swung past close enough for us to collect two geese.

And the shooting was over. We watched hundreds of the big birds fly past just outside shotgun range on their way to a site they'd been using in the morning for weeks.

Unlucky?

Not really — we simply were poorly prepared for the hunt.

Although we'd spent the previous evening scouting for geese and had found a site where some were coming in, we'd missed the mother lode by a mile.

Waterfowl will come in where they're used to feeding. And under some circumstances, no amount of seductive calling, no huge number of decoys, no amount of ready feed will induce them to come in anywhere else.

Under other circumstances, geese will come in anywhere there is a decoy spread — and that's why so many waterfowl hunters have some success setting up anywhere it is handy.

The art of decoying carries with it one main secret — set up in the right place. And generally speaking, that's the place where ducks and geese are used to coming in.

Several years ago, I set up an opening day duck hunt for some of the Times-News staff members. The site was Pioneer Reservoir, a popular opening day hunting spot near Bliss.

Competition from other hunters can be keen at Pioneer, so I took competition into account.

That year, several hundred mallards were using the reservoir and their favorite resting spot was a channel on the south side.

Unfortunately, the channel was near a spot which hunters favor for parking. If we set up on the favorite resting spot, someone would be coming or going constantly during the day. I expected the ducks to avoid all the activity.

Obviously, the ducks would be coming in somewhere else. The question was where.

To solve that problem, I drove to the marshy reservoir and parked my pickup where hunters would be parking the next weekend.

I walked over and flushed the ducks, noting where they went. That was their second preference for resting areas.

And that's where we set out a dozen decoys opening day. Ducks kept streaming in in pairs, trios, and singles. We had a wonderful hunt.

The next year, the ducks preferred another spot on the reservoir, and that was the best place to set up. Other hunters got shooting only if someone was in the best area. Otherwise, the ducks simply rafted up and stayed put.

When you set out decoys, remember that waterfowl nearly always face into the wind.

If they're on water, they must paddle against the wind all the time to hold their position. On water and land, they like to be facing into the wind for takeoffs and landings because the air movement aids these maneuvers.

If you spend any time watching birds feeding or at rest through binoculars, you'll have a good idea where to set up decoys. But binoculars have one disadvantage. They tend to compress distances.

Birds which appear shoulder to shoulder are actually three to four feet apart. Generally, you might find a breeding pair relatively close together, but most other ducks keep a little distance between them and their flockmates.

Waterfowl bunch up only when alarmed. Bunching your decoys has the same result as blowing an alarm call on your mallard quacker. For the uninitiated, that's three loud, distinct quacks. Beginners often blow that in trying to lure ducks because it is the call they've heard most often, just as they often bunch up decoys.

Next week, I'll discuss setting out duck and goose decoys, tell you about some effective patterns to use and why they work.

THE ACES® BOBBY WOLFF

"A reasonable probability is the only certainty." — Edgar Watson Howe.

The bidding and West's opening lead removed all doubt about which defender held the remaining high cards. All that was left for declarer to do was to put that knowledge to good use.

At a recent San Antonio regional tournament, some Souths took the red suit finesses with little hope of winning either one. After South had won the first spade, the heart finesse lost to East's king. East then cashed a high spade and the club ace, and then exited with a trump. South had no recourse but to try the diamond finesse and, as expected, went down one.

When Norman Caruthers of San Antonio held the South cards, he placed little faith in winning either finesse and looked for a way to get 10 tricks without trying either one.

At trick two, he led his spade nine to East's 10, which made East uncomfortable. East sidestepped by cashing his club ace and playing his club deuce, won in dummy. The ace of hearts came next, followed by the king of clubs. When East failed to ruff, Norman led a second heart to East's king and East was stuck. A spade lead would offer a ruff-and discard, and the diamond lead would sacrifice East's king. Either way, Norman had 10 tricks and a well-deserved fine score.
